Area, about 11,900 sq. m. Its surface is generally mountainous, and the coast is deeply indented. The principal rivers are the Minho, Sil and Tago. The forests are extensive and feed large herds of hogs. There are fertile and well-cultivated valleys and good pasture-lands as well as wide tracts of heath. Chestnuts form an important part of the food of the Galicians. The mineral wealth is considerable, but has not been developed. The climate is moist, mild and equable. The mass of the Galicians, or Gallegos are poor and ignorant but hardy and industrious and they make the best soldiers, sailors and servants in the peninsula. The chief city is Lugo, which is the seat of the captain-general. Pop. in 1900 1,941,405.

Galicia, gá-lá-si-á (Pol. Galicya Galicya Ser. Gal) a crown land of Austria-Hungary in (Austria-Hungary), composed of the titular kingdom of Galicia and Lodomeria, the duchies of Anabwits and Zator and the grand-duchy of Cracow and comprising Austrian Poland.

It is bounded N. by Russian Poland NE and E. by the Russian governments of Volhynia and Podolia SE by Bukovina S. by Hungary and W. by Moravia and a small portion of Prussian Silesia. Area, 30,301 sq. m.

Its contour is generally defined by natural boundaries on the S. by the Carpathians NW by the Vistula SE by the Bialy Caracorus, a tributary of the Pruth and for a short distance by the Dniester and E. by the Zbruz, a tributary of the Dniester. Part of the N. and all the NE are without natural boundaries. The great physical features of the country are, in a manner determined by the Carpathians and their ramifications. The loftiest summit, the Great Kriwan (on the Hungarian frontier), has a height of 5390 feet. Although harboring lingering patches of protected snow none of the mountains properly reach the line of perpetual snow. The chief river on the N and W of the main watershed is the Vistula, which receives the Sola, the navigable Danajon (whose main affluent is the Poprad) Wislaka, and navigable San, and also drains the NE corner by its tributary the Bug. The chief river on the other side is the Danaster which rises near the centre of the province (becoming navigable at Sember) and flows across it in an ESE. direction, receiving numerous tributaries on both banks. The climate is severe (the warmest of any of the provinces of the empire) particularly in the S, where the land rises to the lofty Carpathian summits. The winters are long and the summers comparatively short, but very warm. The average annual temperature at Cracow is about 47° and slightly higher at Lemberg.

The region is still largely forested, but there are extensive areas of fine pasture-land. In general where the elevation is small the soil is of great fertility and yields abundant crops of wheat, rye, barley, oats, and maize. Potatoes are raised in immense quantities. Hemp flax and tobacco are also extensively grown. The domestic animals include great numbers of horned cattle generally of a superior description and a fine hardy breed of horses well adapted for cavalry. Sheep, goats, swine, bees, and poultry abound. The minerals include marble, alabaster, petroleum, copper, celestine, coal, iron and rock salt. The extraction of rock salt and petroleum is of great importance. Iron occurs in parts of the central Carpathian chain and bog iron ore is frequently met with in extensive seams on the plains. The best-known salt-works are those of Wieliczka, with their remarkable stalactite cavern, and Bochnia. Manufactures have latterly made much progress, spirit cloth, wooden ware and parquetry, potash, tar, turpentine, paraffine, paper, leather, pottery and glass being leading articles of manufacture. The principal exports are salt, petroleum, hides, wool, cattle, wood, coal, wine, seed, linens and brandy. The bulk of the population is of Slavic race, about evenly divided between Poles and Ruthenians, the former being Roman Catholics while the latter belong to the United Greek Church. The superior intelligence and economic position of the Poles give them the political ascendancy. More than 10 per cent of the inhabitants are Jews, who form a large proportion of the population of the cities. There are also many Germans. Educational establishments both for superior and ordinary instruction are numerous. At the head of the former stand the universities of Cracow (which also has a royal academy of sciences) and Lemberg. Capital, Lemberg. Pop. in 1900 4,607,818. In 1900 7,515,816. The bulk of Galicia was seized by Austria in the first partition of Poland, in 1772. Cracow was annexed in 1795, but was separated from Austria together with a small territory in 1815 to form the Republic of Cracow which existed till 1846.

Genesee River rises in Potter co. Pa. from which it passes into Allegany co. N.Y. It flows generally northward and enters Lake Ontario at Charlotte, 7 miles N of Rochester. It is about 140 miles long. Near the middle of its course it runs for 20 miles in a deep and narrow gorge between perpendicular cliffs of sandstone which at some places are 350 feet high. In this gorge it descends more than 500 feet, and forms 3 cascades, one of which (Portage Falls) near Portageville is 110 feet high. At Mount Morris in Livingston co., N.Y. the river emerges from this chasm into the broad and fertile Genesee Valley.

At Rochester where it is crossed by the Erie Canal the river has a vertical fall of about 65 feet and affords unlimited water power. Between this place and the mouth of the river occurs another cascade.

Geneva, ghêl-nâ-êl (Fr Genève, ghêl nêl-êl Ger Gen/ghêl, auc. Gen'va or Gen'va), a city of Switzerland and capital of the canton of the same name, in lat. (observatory) 45° 11' 53" N lon 6° 5' 11" E. It is beautifully situated at the SW end of Lake Geneva, which here narrows almost to a point and pours out the Rhone, which is joined by the Arve a little below the town. Located in a basin formed partly by the Jura and partly by a secondary chain of the Alps, Geneva presents with its handsome villas crowning the surrounding heights a striking appearance when approached by land or by water. The Rhone is crossed by 8 bridges and divides the city into two unequal parts. On the left bank lies the old town, the seat of the administration, of commerce, and of finance, together with the quarter called Neuf-Vives. On the right bank is the Quarter St. Gervais, inhabited by the working-people, and the principal residence-quarter of the foreign colony. Here, too, are some of the finest hotels. The oldest portion of the city lies high above the water and consists of narrow, dark, and steep streets, remarkable for the irregularity of their roof-lines. In the lower part of the old town near the river is the principal commercial quarter. Here is the Grand Quai du Lac with its canalization, the Quai des Neuf-Vives, with a broad esplanade, and parallel to these quays are more fine broad streets. On the right bank of the river the Quai de Mont Blanc affords a fine view of the snow-capped giant of the Alps, which is about 40 miles distant. Among the bridges may be mentioned the fine Pont de Mont Blanc and the Pont des Bergues between which extends Rousseau's Island, with a bronze bust of Rousseau by Pradier. New boulevards encircle the city land out along the lines of the old fortifications which were dismantled in 1861. On the left side of the river are the fine Promenades du Lac (Jardin Anglais) and Place du Port with the beautiful national monument. Farther from the river is the handsome Place Neuve, with the new theatre in Renaissance style, the Musée Rath, and the Conservatory of Music. The equestrian statue of General Dufour stands on this square. On the right bank on the Quai du Mont Blanc, is the Place des Alpes, with the magnificent canopied warlike monument erected to the duke of Brunswick (d. 1873) who left his fortune to the city. The most prominent of the churches is the medieval Romanesque Cathedral of St. Pierre, which crowns the highest point of the old town. The interesting old prison was formerly a bishop's palace. The Hôtel de Ville (in Florentine style) is ascended by a curious inclined plane which was constructed in the sixteenth century. Facing it is the Arsenal containing the Historical Museum. Near by is the Musée Vol, with rich collections of Greek, Roman, and Etruscan antiquities. On the Promenade des Bastilles are the new apartment buildings (1867-71). Connected with them is the botanical garden, SE. of which is the Athénée. In the vicinity are the hall of justice and the Collège de St. Antoine, founded by Calvin. The university, founded as an academy in 1569, was raised to its present rank in 1873. It numbers over 1400 students more than half of whom are foreigners. A considerable proportion of the students are women. Connected with the university are a large library and valuable archaeological and scientific collections.

Geneva is noted as an educational centre. It possesses a large number of technical schools as well as private schools for boys and girls, largely patronized by foreigners. There are many associations for the advancement of science and art. Among the charitable institutions of the city, the municipal hospital deserves special mention. Geneva is an important industrial and commercial centre. Its chief manufactures are those of watches and parts of watches. Among its other manufactures are jewelry, musical instruments (especially musical boxes), philosophical instruments, and electrical apparatus. Diamond-cutting, enamelling, and the testing of chronometers are also prominent among its industries. Geneva enjoys a mild climate. Elevation, 1240 feet. Pop. in 1900, 106,710.

The origin of Geneva is unknown, but its antiquity is proved by the reference which Caesar makes to it in his Commentaries on the Gallic War. It early became the seat of a bishopric. It was one of the capitals of the Burgundians, passed in the sixth century to the Franks, subsequently belonged to the second kingdom of Burgundy and became incorporated with the German Empire in the eleventh century. By a grant of the emperor the temporal was added to the spiritual power of the bishops. The rulers of Savoy however gradually acquired a share in the government, and at the same time the prosperous burghers began to take affairs into their own hands. The struggle between the dukes of Savoy and the citizens ended in favor of the latter, early in the sixteenth century from which time Geneva formed part of the Swiss Confederacy. Geneva played a great rôle in the Reformation as the cradle of the Calvinist movement. The city was seized by the French in 1798, and formed, till 1813, the capital of the department of Léman. In 1815 along with a small territory, it joined the new Swiss Confederacy.

Geneva, the westernmost canton of the Swiss Confederacy, bounded W and NW by France, N. by the canton of Vaud and the Lake of Geneva, and E and S by France (Haute-Savoie). Area, 107 sq. m. The surface is broken by several hills none of which are more than 466 feet above the lake. The whole canton belongs to the basin of the Rhone, and the only streams of importance are the Rhone and the Arve, which join a short distance below the city of Geneva. The whole territory wears the appearance of a beautiful garden. The natural flora is remarkably rich and makes the surrounding country a favorite resort of the botanist. Part of the surface is under the waters of the vine; but the wine is not remarkable for either quantity or quality. Manufactures are extensively carried on (see GENEVA city). The legislative power is exercised by a great council and the executive power by a council of state, both being elective bodies. Capital, Geneva. Pop. in 1900, 133,417 of whom 82,541 were Protestants and 47,238 Catholics.

Geneva, a county in the SE. part of Alabama, bordering on Florida, has an area of 662 sq. m. It is intersected by the Choctawhatchee and Pea rivers. Capital, Geneva. Pop. in 1890 16,096 in 1900, 19,096.

Geneva, Lake of, or Lake Jeman (Ger Genfer or Genève Fr. Lac Léman, Mk. M'émoré, and Lac de Genève Lk. deh shah aniv and Lemanus Lacus), a lake of Europe, between Switzerland and France. It is traversed by the river Rhone and occupies what many geologists assume to be a glacially excavated rock-basin. It is about 45 miles long and about 8 miles in greatest width, between Morges and Amphion. The surface is 1230 feet above sea-level maximum depth, 1994 feet, between Onchy and Evian les-Bains. Area, 224 sq m. Lake Geneva presents beautiful scenery and its northern and western shores afford strikingly grand views of the Mont Blanc chain. Its waters, differing from those of most other Swiss lakes, are of a beautiful deep-blue color. In common with other Swiss lakes, it presents the phenomenon of the cercles: sudden fluctuations of level due apparently to changes in the atmospheric pressure, the highest longitudinal swell is about 6 feet. The water is remarkably transparent. Among the towns situated on its banks are Geneva (at its SW extremity), Coppet, Nyon, Rolle, Morges, Lausanne, Vevey, Montreux, Territet-Chillon, Villeneuve (at its E extremity), Evian les-Bains, and Thonon, the last two in Savoy. In early Roman days the lake extended considerably farther on the E side, along what is now the valley of the Rhone, and perhaps nearly to the site of Martigny.

Genoa, ghē-nō (It. Genova, ghē-nō-vā). Fr. Gênes, ghē-nēs (anc. Genoa) a fortified seaport of northern Italy, the most important commercial city of the kingdom is situated at the head of the Gulf of Genoa, an arm of the Mediterranean Sea, between the rivers Bisagno and Polcevera, 75 miles SE of Turin. Lat. 44° 24' N. lon. 8° 53' E. The appearance of the city from the sea is beautiful and striking. It is the form of a crescent and rises gradually from the shore, the whiteness of the houses, the imposing outlines of the intermingling palaces, and the distant villas and gardens, heightening the effect of its picturesque position. Thus, together with the numerous palatial edifices which it contains, has conferred upon it the epithet of La Superba (the proud). It is enclosed by powerful fortifications forming a vast semicircle, supported by numerous detached outworks, crowning hill after hill and extending over a length of 9½ miles. In the older parts of the town the streets are extremely narrow, dark, steep and crooked and almost wholly inaccessible to carriages. In the newer quarters many are spacious and are lined with noble edifices. Among the finest streets are the Via Balbi, Via Garibaldi (formerly Nuova) and Via Roma on which are palaces of superb architecture. The magnificent avenue known as the Via di Circosvalante, skirting the hillside, commands a striking view of the city and the sea. Many of the palaces are crowded with works of art. The principal are the ducal palace (the former residence of the doges), the Doria, Serra, (Giustiniani, Cambrano, Balbi, Rossi, Bianco, Doria, and the Palazzo Reale, which was purchased by the royal family in 1815.

The churches and hospitals of Genoa rival the palaces in grandeur. The most remarkable of the former is the Duomo, or cathedral of San Lorenzo founded in the eleventh century. The most conspicuous church in the general view of the city is that of Carignano, finely situated on a hill, and having a resemblance to St. Peter's in its general plan. The other churches of note are Santo Stefano, San Siro, the most ancient Christian foundation in Genoa, San Ambrogio, containing several fine paintings and splendidly decorated within, and L'Annunziata, the most sumptuous of Genoa's churches. The principal charitable institution is the Albergo de' Poveri, in which orphans and old people find shelter. The house has accommodation for 1800. The Ospedale di Pazzanone, founded in 1490 for the orphan, the blind and the deaf and dumb institution are other famous charities. Genoa has numerous institutions devoted to the arts and sciences and the publications of its learned academies held high rank. It possesses a university created as such in 1813, a school of fine arts, royal marine school and school of navigation. The Museo Civico contains collections of natural history and a botanical garden is associated with the university. The Teatro Carlo Felice, with a seating capacity of 2000 is one of the largest theatres of Italy. Genoa's most imposing monument is the statue of Columbus (who was born here or in the vicinity) erected in 1862. Genoa is the seat of an archbishop.

The manufactures of Genoa are considerable. Its velvets and silks are world famed, and it likewise has manufactures of cloth, ribbons, damask, embroideries, artificial flowers, oil-cloth, hats, paper, ceramics, gloves, lace, leather and cotton goods, oils, and soap. Besides these, its work in gold, silver, and marble has a high reputation for silver filigree and shell (coral) work fine cabinet-work and house-furniture, the Genoese workmen probably stand unrivalled, and their prodigiousness are sent in all parts of the world. The old port of Genoa is of a semicircular form, about three-quarters of a mile in diameter formed by two moles projecting into the sea from opposite sides the Molo Nuovo or New Mole, and the Molo Vecchio or Old Mole. This safe but inadequate harbor has been materially added to by the construction (1877-1885) of new moles and breakwaters, which have given to the city the Porto Nuovo and the Avamporio or outerport for war vessels. The aggregate water ways of the several basins now cover 550 acres. There are yards for naval construction. In mediæval times the Genoese merchants were remarkable for their enterprise and for the extent of their dealings, sharing with the Venetians the trade between Europe and the East. The commerce of the city subsequently declined greatly but it has again assumed large proportions. The population in 1883 was 115,257 in 1891, 179,615 in 1901, 234,710.

Genoa came under the sway of Rome towards the close of the third century A.C. After the fall of the Roman Empire the city passed successively into the hands of the Byzantines, Lombards and Franks. In the tenth century the Genoese were enabled to assert their independence. Their little state soon developed into a powerful commercial republic, formidable on the sea. They gained possession of Corsica, waged endless wars with Pisa, over whom they triumphed at the close of the thirteenth century and planted numerous colonies in the Levant and on the shores of the Black Sea. A long contest between the two great republics of Genoa and Venice finally terminated in favor of the latter which ultimately greatly eclipsed its rival. From the fourteenth century the Genoese state was ruled by a doge. The republic came to an end with the occupation of northern Italy in 1797 by Bonaparte who constituted the Genoese dominions into the Ligurian Republic. This was annexed to the French Empire in 1805. In 1815 Genoa and its territory were ceded with the kingdom of Sardinia.

Georgia, ge-or-jee-ah, or Græcia, groo'-ee-ah (Georgian Kartli or Sakartvelo Pers. Gurjistan Armenian Vracan and Iberia) a country of Transcaucasia, Russian Empire included in the governments of Tiflis and Kutais. Down to the close of the eighteenth century it was an independent kingdom. It comprises the fertile valley of the upper Kur. The region produces cereals, wine, cotton, fruits in great quantity etc. The Georgians, forming about one-half of the whole population, have been celebrated for the athletic frames of the men and the beauty of the women. Their speech belongs to the group of Caucasian languages. The various tribes classed together as Georgians number considerably over a million souls. The great bulk dwell within the limits of Georgia.

Georgia (named in honor of George II. King of Great Britain) one of the Southern States of the American Union bordering on the Atlantic Ocean, is bounded N by North Carolina and Tennessee, NE and E by South Carolina and the Atlantic Ocean S. by Florida, and W by Alabama. From South Carolina it is separated by the Savannah (and Tugaloo) and Chattahoochee Rivers, from Florida, in part, by St. Mary's River and from Alabama, in part, by the Chattahoochee River. Its extreme limits are the parallels of 34° 21' and 35° N lat. and the meridians of 80° 48' and 85° 38' W lon. Extreme length, 320 miles from N to S. greatest breadth, 354 miles. Area, 59,475 sq. m. Georgia was one of the original 13 states of the Union.

Physical Aspect. Minerals.—The face of the country is exceedingly varied. In the N and NW is a mountain region covering some 25 counties, whose ranges pursue a somewhat parallel NE. and SW. course across the state, terminating in the hill-country of Alabama. Numerous summits of the Blue Ridge exceed 3000 feet in altitude, and Fodder Bald Mountain attains 4831 feet. Between the mountain-ridges there is a broken country, with very fertile valleys, a delightful climate, and varied mineral wealth. Southeast of the mountains a plain or terrace, some 65 miles in average breadth, extends along the foot-hills with a red loamy soil, naturally very productive. Another still lower and wider terrace or plain borders this region with limits having also a general NE. and SW. direction, and containing much productive land with districts which have a light soil. Some 60 miles in average distance from the coast is the SE limit of the so-called pine barrens, which have afforded great supplies of timber and naval stores and which have a productive and easily wrought soil. Along the coast and near the lower courses of the streams are rich alluvial districts, interspersed with swamps, which are available for rice-culture. The sea-islands, separated from the main-land by shallow sounds, have a soil well adapted to the growth of sea-island cotton. In the SW there is a large area which has long been celebrated for its cotton product. In the SE. is the great Okefenokee Swamp.

A line drawn from Augusta SW to Euclid, Ala. roughly marks the NW limit of a great Tertiary (Eocene) tract, which covers nearly all that part of Georgia which lies SE. of this line, except the Pleistocene and alluvion of the coast. The NW portion of the state is mainly based upon Ancestral rocks, but there is a considerable area of the Cretaceous to the E. of Columbus, and a large Silurian tract in the north-western angle of the state, crossed by narrow belts of the Devonian, upon which rest beds of Carboniferous strata. Lookout Mountains which crosses the extreme NW corner of Georgia, lying partly in Tennessee and also partly in Alabama, contains semi-bituminous coal of excellent quality. Gold has been found in most of the northern counties especially in Cherokee, Lumpkin, Carroll and Cobb counties. Among other minerals are copper, manganese, silver, zinc, lead, hematite, fine marble, choice granite, Hemitoss, baryta, and graphite. Petroleum is also found. The gold output for the year 1904 was only 5813 ounces, and the silver product was inconsiderable. The production of coal in the year 1903 was somewhat more than 44,000 tons. Bauxite has been extensively mined since 1889 (the annual product being several thousand tons) and the state yields a large portion of the manganese output of the United States. Natural medicinal springs, sulfates, chalybeate, and antiphlogous, are numerous. In northern and central Georgia are a number of remarkable caves, many picturesque caverns, romantic mountain scenery and abundant relics of prehistoric times, such as mounds, fortifications, places of sepulture, etc. Interesting fossil remains of the tylodon megatherium, and other species of extinct gigantic mammals occur in the east-region.

Hydrography.—The rivers are numerous and afford important means of internal communication but the great extension of railroads has vastly reduced the amount of steamboat travel and commerce. The streams more or less suited for steam navigation are the Savannah Ogeechee (with its main tributary the Oconee) Altamaha (with its constituents the Oconee and Ocmulgee) Satilla, St. Mary, Flint, Chattahoochee, Withlacoochee, upper Coosa and some others. The sounds which separate the sea-islands from the main-land constitute together a safe and lead-looked channel, well suited for steamboat communication. In the highlands, the numerous streams afford abundant and unfauling water power.

Climate.—The climate is as varied as the face of the country. The mountain-country in the N. has cool, delightful summer weather while its winters are mild and comfortable. This region is very healthful. The pine-barrens of the centre and S. are equally healthful, but warmer and are especially recommended as a winter resort for consumptives. The coast-region and the S. portion generally have a summer climate which is very enervating to persons of northern origin and people are here liable to severe attacks of malarial and remittent fevers. Snow falls not unfrequently in the northern and central regions, and less frequently in the south but never remains long.

Agricultural Resources.—Cotton and corn are the leading farm productions. The coast-region is well adapted to the growth of the high priced sea-island cotton. The cotton crop is mainly produced in the central west-central and southwestern regions. The total commercial crop for the year 1898-1900 was 1,345,700 bales, grown over an area of 3,550,000 acres. In the year 1904-5 it amounted to about 2,000,000 bales, being exceeded by that of Texas alone. Of late years Georgia has widely extended her area of cornfields. Georgia has much fine grazing land. Tobacco is chiefly produced in the V. rice and some sugar cane are grown in the S., and the former has long been a staple crop in the lowlands. The agricultural product for the year 1900 was (in bushels) corn 54,119,340 wheat, 5,011,133 oats, 7,010,040 rye, 109,529 potatoes, 301,816 the yield of hay was 109,237 tons. The average grown under rice was in 1900 21,399 under sugar-cane, 24,896. The wool-clip for the same year was (gross) 1,737,813 pounds. Pigs are fattened extensively mainly for home consumption. Fruit-culture, wine-growing, and market-gardening are steadily increasing. Large quantities of fruits, especially melons and peaches, are shipped to the north. Peanuts are very extensively cultivated.

Manufactures, Lumber, etc.—Georgia has taken a new and important departure in manufacturing industries. In 1900 alone, 30 new cotton-mills were established, operating 340,000 spindles. The value of the cotton-goods produced in the same year was $18,544,910. Cotton-seed oil was produced to the value of $3,044,112. Woollen goods are also manufactured to a considerable extent. Machine-shops, glimmeries, tobacco-factories, tanneries, and lumber-mills are numerous. The output of the tobacco-industry in 1900 was 3,923,316 cigars. The lumber business is especially large, a very considerable area of the state being still covered with forest. Valuable species of pine, oak, cedar, ash, cypress, hickory and other timber trees abound. The shipments of yellow pine during 1904 exceeded 30,000,000 feet. Brunswick, Darien, and Savannah are seats of large exports of the forest products, Savannah being the largest naval-stores port of the United States. Atlanta, Augusta, Macon, and Savannah are the leading manufacturing centres. In 1900 there were in operation in the state 6791 miles of railroad.

Counties.—Georgia has 137 counties.—Appling, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Bartow, Berrien, Bibb, Brooks, Bryan, Bulloch, Burke, Butts, Calhoun, Camden, Campbell, Carroll, Catoosa, Charlton, Chatham, Chattahoochee, Chattooga, Cherokee, Clarke, Clay, Clayton, Clinch, Cobb, Coffee, Colquitt, Columbia, Coweta, Crawford, Dade, Dawson, Decatur, DeKalb, Dodge, Dooley, Dougherty, Douglas, Early, Echols, Effingham, Elbert, Emanuel, Fannin, Fayette, Floyd, Forsyth, Franklin, Fulton, Gilmer, Glascock, Glynn, Gordon, Greene, Gwinnett, Habersham, Hall, Hancock, Haralson, Harris, Hart, Heard, Henry, Houston, Irwin, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Johnson, Jones, Laurens, Lee, Liberty, Lincoln, Lowndes, Lumpkin, Macon, Madison, Marion, McDuffie, McIntosh, Meriwether, Miller, Milton, Mitchell, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Murray, Muscogee, Newton, Oconee, Oglethorpe, Paulding, Pickens, Pierce, Pike, Polk, Pulaski, Putnam, Quitman, Rabun, Randolph, Richmond, Rockdale, Schley, Screven, Spalding, Stewart, Sumter, Talbot, Taliaferro, Telfair, Taylor, Teale, Terrell, Thomas, Towns, Troup, Twiggs, Union, Upson, Walker, Walton, Ware, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, White, Whitfield, Wilcox, Wilkes, Wilkinson, Worth, Yates and Towns.—Of these the principal are Atlanta, the capital and largest city a thriving railroad centre, the seat of extensive trade and manufactures (pop. in 1900 89,872). Savannah, the principal seaport and commercial centre (pop. 54,244). Augusta, on the Savannah River (39,441), Macon on the Ocmulgee (23,272). Columbus, on the Chattahoochee (17,814). Athens on the Oconee (14,245). Other places of importance are Brunswick, Rome, Americus, Thomasville, Griffin, Marietta, Milledgeville, and Gainesville. The principal seaports are Savannah, Brunswick, Darien and St. Marys.

Public Education.—In 1899 the school population was 756,900 and the number of buildings used as school houses 6622. Athens favorably situated in the north is the seat of the state university with academies, technical, law and medical departments, and having a branch called the State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts. At Dalton is the North Georgia Agricultural College, also a state institution affiliated with the university. There is a non-sectarian college at Bowdon. Macon is the seat of Mercer University (Baptist) and of the Wesleyan Female College. Emory College at Oxford is under Methodist supervision. Atlanta and South Atlanta have the Atlanta and Clark Universities, the Georgia School of Technology, the Morris Brown College, and the Spelman Institute. Savannah has the Academy of St. Vincent de Paul. There are normal schools and colleges at Athens, Cuthbert, Demorest, Macon, Milledgeville, Thomasville, and Trenton. At Cave Spring is a state institution for deaf-mutes and at Macon an academy for the blind.

Government.—The governor is chosen for a term of 2 years. The legislature (general assembly) consists of a senate of 44 members, elected for 2 years, and a house of 175 representatives, likewise chosen for 2 years. The state has 11 representatives in the lower house of Congress.

Pop. in 1775 75,000 in 1790 82,543 in 1800 162,688 in 1810 252,433 in 1820 340,985 in 1830 512,383 in 1840 681,392 in 1850 998,185 in 1860 1,057,236 in 1870 1,154,109 in 1880 1,543,180 in 1890 1,837,363 in 1900 2,516,331. Nearly half of the population is colored (1,054,613 in 1900). The number of foreign-born persons in 1900 was only 12,405.

History.—Georgia was the last colony established by the English in what is now the United States. It was founded in 1733 by Oglethorpe and his associates as a refuge for poor debtors. The first settlement was made at Savannah. In 1733 the colony was made a royal province. Georgia warmly espoused the cause of her northern sister-province in the Revolutionary war. In 1778, Savannah was taken by the British who held it till 1782. The first state constitution was adopted in 1777. In 1798 Mississippi Territory was set off from Georgia, which up to that time had been bounded on the W. by the Mississippi River. A few years later Georgia relinquished all her remaining lands in the present states of Mississippi and Alabama, and received from the United States a strip 12 miles wide along her present northern boundary, since which time her limits have remained unchanged. The lands of the Creek and Cherokee within the boundaries of Georgia passed into the possession of the state in the course of the first three decades of the nineteenth century. In 1633 and 1636 respectively the Creeks and Cherokees were removed from the state. From this time Georgia prospered greatly and merited her title of the Empire state of the South. In 1861 she passed the ordinance of secession. It was not until 1870 that the work of reconstruction was completed and the state readmitted into the Union. The expositions held at Atlanta in 1891 and 1896 gave a great impulse to the industrial development of the state.

The population in 1871 was 61,658,000, in 1890 65,234,000, in 1900 86,567,000. It is now (1905) fully 90,000,000.

Constitution, Defence.—The present empire dates from 1871. By the terms of the constitution the states of Germany form an eternal union for the protection of their rights and the care of the welfare of the German people. The supreme direction of the political and military affairs of the empire is vested in the king of Prussia, who, as such, bears the title of 'Deutscher Kaiser or German Emperor. The legislative functions of the empire are vested in the Bundesrat, or Federal Council, and the Reichstag, or Diet of the Realm. The Bundesrat represents the individual states of Germany and the Reichstag the German nation. The members of the Bundesrat are appointed by the governments of the individual states. The total number of votes in the Bundesrat is 58.—Prussia having 17, Bavaria 6, Saxony 4, Württemberg 4, Baden 3, Hesse 3, Mecklenburg-Schwerin 2, Brunswick 3 and the remaining states 1 each. The members of the Reichstag 397 in number, are elected by universal suffrage for the term of 5 years. The states are represented in the Reichstag proportionately to their population. The chief executive officer under the emperor is the chancellor of the empire, who presides over the Bundesrat. The imperial acts and regulations (other than those relating to the army and navy) promulgated by the emperor have to be countersigned by the imperial chancellor, who thus assumes a kind of parliamentary responsibility. There is no ministerial responsibility in the ordinary sense. The chancellor conducts the general administration of the empire and directs its foreign policy. The various imperial ministries are under his supervision. The capital of the empire is Berlin. The Imperial Court (Reichsgericht) has its seat at Leipzig.

The army of the empire numbered, in 1902, 484,351 men (besides officers, surgeons, etc.) on a peace footing and about 3,000,000 men on a war footing. The navy comprises about 60 effective battleships and cruisers. Among the principal seaports are Metz, Strassburg, Coblenz, Cologne, Mainz, Ulm, Ingolstadt, Magdeburg, Spandau, Küstrin, Posen, Kiel, Danzig, Königsberg, and Neuen.

Faces of the Country.—Germany is divided naturally into three regions—the Alpine foreland, which in the S comprises some of the slopes of the true Alps and extends from Lake Constance to the mouth of the Ine, the central highlands, which cover the median region N of the Danube, from the Carpathians to the middle Rhine, and in which the loftiest elevation (the Schneekoppe, in the Riesengebirge) does not exceed 9266 feet and the great northern plain, which covers the entire sea-front in the lowest and flattest part of the empire, and was until a recent geological period (the Tertiary) covered by the ocean. Few points in this level region rise above 600 feet in elevation. In the W of Germany and from the extremity of the Alpine range which extends between the Danube and the Lake of Constance, a chain of heights extends N on the eastern side of the Rhine to the plain of Westphalia. Its principal masses are the Schwarzwald (Black Forest) between the valleys of the Rhine and Neckar, the Odenwald, the Hühnergebirge, the Vogelsberg, the Taunus, and the Westerwald. W of the Rhine is the low range of the Harz, and further N are the highlands of the Elbe, exhibiting numerous traces of former volcanic activity. The Fichtelgebirge, in the NE of Bavaria, separates the basins of the affluents of the North Sea and the Black Sea, and may be said to form the nucleus of a mountain complex which includes the Erzgebirge (Ore Mountains), the Böhmerwald (Bohemian Forest), the German Jura, and the Thüringerwald (Thuringian Forest). Beyond the Erzgebirge the Riesengebirge (Giant Mountains) form part of the boundary with Austria-Hungary (Bohemia, Moravia). The most northerly of the former elevations of the land are the Harz Mountains. The loftiest elevation of all Germany is the Zugspitze, in Bavaria, 9726 feet in altitude. The whole of the country comprised between the mountains on the S and the North Sea, Denmark and the Baltic Sea on the N extending from the Netherlands to Russia, forms part of the great plain of northern Europe, and is traversed by large rivers. On the Baltic coast are the three principal islands of Germany,—Rügen, Usedom and Fehmarn.

The waters of Germany flow N to the North Sea and the Baltic and E to the Black Sea. Its principal rivers in the basin of the North Sea are the Rhine with its affluents the Moselle, Main, Lahn, Sarg, Ruhr and Lippe on the right and the Ill, Nahe, and Moselle on the left; the Elbe, Weser (with the Aller, Werra, and Fulda) and the Elbe with its affluents the Elde and Saale on the left and the Elster and Havel (which receives the Spree) on the right; in the basin of the Baltic the Oder (with its affluents the Neisse and Kettebach on the left and the Hartzsch, Wartha, and Inna on the right), the Vistula, Pregel and Memel (Niemn) and in the basin of the Black Sea, the Danube, with its affluents the Tisza, Lech, Isar and Inn on the right and the Werra, Altmühl, Naab, and Regen on the left.

The lakes of Germany belong to the Alpine regions in the basins of the Rhine and Danube on the S and to the plain of the Baltic on the N. There are few in the centre. In the S are the Lake of Constance, Chiem See, Starnberg See, Ammer See, and Königssee, which are generally deep basins surrounded by mountains as in Switzerland, and noted for their beautiful scenery. The lakes of northern Germany are of quite an opposite character, being little more than shallow marshes in the nearly level plains. Among the best known of these are the Pücker See, in Holstein; the Müritzer See, Plauer See, and Schweriner See in Mecklenburg; the Ruppiner See and the Ucker See, in Brandenburg; the Müritzer See and Vilmser See in Pomerania; and the Spirding See, Mauer See, and others in East Prussia. The larger inland lakes or bays of the northern coast are Helgoland Bay, Klei Bay, Lübeck Bay, Pomeranian Bay, and the Gulf of Danzig, besides the three extensive lagoons of the Baltic Sea, known as the Stettiner Haß, Frische Haß, and the Karlsbuck Haß.

Climate.—The climate of Germany is in general temperate and healthy but varies in different divisions. The mean annual temperature of the western parts, reduced to the level of the sea, is the same as in the British Isles; E. of the Oder, the climate approximates to that of Denmark and the S of Sweden. In northern Germany the winters are short and so mild that the snow ordinarily lies only a few days; summer sets in early and the heat in the valleys is often excessive and here make the shortest, and the vine flourish. In the N and also in the S the winters are long and severe. The valleys of the Rhine, Moselle, Neckar, and Main, as well as the southwestern plains generally enjoy the warmest climate, the mean annual temperature being over 50°. The rainfall over Germany averages 29 inches, but in most places the precipitation does not exceed 29 inches, the mountains receiving about 46 inches. The prevailing winds are W and NW.

Minerals.—The mineral wealth of the country is extensive and varied and includes gold, silver, iron, copper, tin, lead, mercury, bismuth, zinc, arsenic, cobalt, antimony, coal and various salts. The silver product is nearly half of that of the whole of Europe and in the production of coal and iron Germany stands only second to Great Britain among all the countries of Europe, far surpassing every other country of the continent. The principal mining districts are Westphalia, Silesia, Prussia, and Silesia for coal and iron; the Harz for silver and copper; Silesia for zinc and Saxony for coal, iron and silver. The quantity of coal mined in 1901 was 133,417,000 tons of lignite, 44,311,000 tons, of iron-ore, 16,570,300 tons, and of asphalt, 847,500 tons. All kinds of building-stone, and the finest lithographic stones (from the quarries of Solenhofen, in Bavaria), marble, porcelain clay etc., occur. There are many medicinal and mineral springs. The country possesses extensive deposits of salt, the saline formations being in the main confined to the diluvial strata of the northern plains (Selzer, Pyr mont, Ems, Eschwege, Wiesbaden, Kissingen, Homburg, Naheim, Aix-la-Chapelle, etc.).

Vegetable Products.—Agriculture.—With the rapid increase in population, Germany has ceased to be preëminently an agricultural country. The soil, however, is made to yield all that good culture, coupled with a favorable climate, can extract from it and the crops, although inadequate for the support of the population are very bountiful. Nearly two-thirds of the area of the empire is occupied by fields, meadows, pastures, vineyards, gardens and orchards. The bulk of the remainder is covered with forests and woods, which comprise fully one-fourth of the total area. The extent of absolutely unproductive land is less than 10 per cent. The farm products comprise all kinds of cereals, potatoes, beets (for sugar), garden produce of all kinds, flax, hemp, tobacco, hops, rape-seed, poppy-seed etc. The largest acreage devoted to any one cereal is that given to rye (15,200,000 acres in 1902). Next in order come oats (11,250,000 acres), wheat (4,720,000 acres) and barley (4,000,000 acres). Buckwheat is raised in the N and corn in the S. About 8,000,000 acres are devoted to potatoes. The cultivation of beets is on a vast scale. Germany produces great quantities of fruit. The principal fruit-trees are the apple, pear, plum and cherry. The vine, first introduced by the Romans, is cultivated as far as lat. 52° N but chiefly in the valleys of the middle Rhine, Moselle, Neckar and Main. The most northerly vineyards of the world are those of Bismar, in the province of Posen. The timber is very extensively distributed, not only in the mountains—from the wooded character of which the word Wald (wood) is often used for mountain—but also in the plains. The principal forest-trees are the fir, spruce, pine, oak, beech and birch. The forests are better cared for than anywhere else in the world and present an aspect of rare beauty.

Germany is abundantly provided with domestic animals,—horned cattle, horses, sheep and pigs. The cattle in 1900 numbered 15,940,000. Among wild animals are the stag, roe, elk, bear, chamois, marmot (the last two in the Bavarian Alps), hamster, lynx, wild-cat, fox, marten, and weasel. The bear and wolf have been exterminated, and the last aurochs (European bison) was killed in 1770. Fish in the rivers comprise carp, pike, perch, eel, and trout. The silk worm is reared in the south.

Inhabitants.—Of the total population of the empire all but about 4,000,000 are Germans. The Poles constitute the bulk of the non-German population. They number over 3,000,000 dwelling mainly in the Prussian provinces of Posen (until the close of the eighteenth century a part of Poland) and Silesia. Other Slav elements are the Wends (in a district between the Elbe and the Oder) and the Czechs in a small part of Silesia. There is a large French-speaking population in Alsace-Lorraine. Erilian, Dutch, Danish, and Lithuanian are also spoken. In 1900 the population of the German Empire comprised 36,000,000 Protestants and 20,500,000 Catholics. The Jews number over half a million. The German language is divided into High and Low German the former being the language of German literature. General education in Germany is of a higher order than in any other country of Europe. There are 21 universities, the most frequented being those of Berlin, Munich, Leipzig, Bonn, Halle, Breslau, Heidelberg, Göttingen, Tübingen, Freiburg and Strasbourg. The advantages derived from these institutions are apparent in the great activity exhibited in every branch of literature and science and in the vast scale of the German book-trade.

Manufactures, Commerce.—Germany is, after the United States and Great Britain, the greatest manufacturing country in the world. The manufactures comprise Hessian silks and woollens, steam-engines of every description, locomotives, iron, steel and all kinds of iron and steel-wares from the heaviest cannon to needles, wooden-ware clothing and the accessories of clothing, furniture, ornamental metal-work, beet-sugar and other food-stuffs, clocks and toys, paper and leather manufactures, chemicals, tobacco, and porcelain. Brewing is a great industry. Stuttgart is one of the principal ship building centers in the world. Germany is the foremost country of continental Europe in the extent of its iron and steel industry. The number of persons employed in the principal manufactures was in 1895 in iron manufactures, 524,707; machinery and instruments, 552,872; textiles, 953,257; paper, 157,909; leather and india-rubber, 150,343; and wooden-ware, 698,406. Some of the leading articles of export, with their valuations in marks, were for the year 1901: textiles, 1,851,100,000; metals and metal wares, 740,000,000; chemicals and drugs, 408,870,000; machinery and instruments, 315,785,000; leather, 265,400,000; and paper, 112,540,000. The principal ports are Hamburg (with Cuxhaven), Bremen (with Bremerhaven), Stettin, Danzig, Königsberg, Memel, and Aina. Internal commerce is greatly facilitated by the numerous navigable rivers all of which are traversed by steamers, and by an excellent system of railways and canals. The number of miles of operated railroads was in 1900 52,192, nearly all of which was owned by the state governments. (For details regarding manufactures see Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, etc.)

Colonies—The colonial possessions of Germany comprise German East Africa, German Southwest Africa, Kamerun, Togo, Kaiser Wilhelm Land (part of New Guinea), Bismarck Archipelago, Carolus Islands, Palau (Palau) Islands, Ladrones (Marianne Islands) part of the Solomon Islands, Marshall Islands, part of the Samoan Islands, and Kiaochow. Their total area is estimated at about 1,025,000 sq. m. and their population at about 14,000,000.

History—The country between the northern outliers of the Alps and the North and Baltic seas, and between the Rhine and the Vistula, known to the Romans as Germania, was inhabited in ancient times by a large number of independent tribes or peoples of the same Germanic blood. At the beginning of the Christian era the Romans extended their sway to the upper Danube (the southern limit of Germania) and along the valley of the Rhine to its mouth. Among the prominent Germanic peoples at this time were the Suevi (whence the name Swabia), Ubi, Batavi, Chatti, Cherusci, Sigambri, Frisii, Hermunduri, Marcomanni, and Quadi. Other German tribes came to the fore at the time of the great migration of nations, in the midst of which the Roman Empire of the West was extinguished in A. D. 476. The Alemanni, Goths, Burgundians, Vandals, Longobards, Franks (a confederation of tribes) Suevi, Saxons, and Huns occupied different provinces of the Roman world, the Vandals even crossing over to Africa. The Franks became the most powerful. Their realm expanded until under their great King Charlemagne it extended from central Italy and the Elbe to the Elder and from the Bay of Biscay to the borders of modern Hungary. In 800 Charlemagne was crowned Roman Emperor by the pope, thus reviving in semblance the Roman Empire of the West. The Frankish realm was partitioned among his grandsons in 843. The kingdom of the western Franks became France, and the kingdoms of Germany, Italy and Lorraine were formed (the last to become soon a duchy of Germany) to which later were added two Burgundian kingdoms (afterwards united into the kingdom of Arles). The migration of nations had brought the Slavs into the Germanic lands as far as the Elbe, and it was only after great efforts that the Germans succeeded in pushing them back or subduing them. The descendants of Charlemagne reigned in Germany down to 911. The royal crown then became elective. The king was chosen by the great lords of the realm among whom the dukes of Saxony, Franconia, Swabia, and Bavaria were at first especially prominent. It soon appeared convenient to allow the succession to continue in the same family and thus there were dynasties of German monarchs. In 962 Otto the Great king of Germany after conquering the crown of Lombardy revived in a measure the empire of Charlemagne by having himself crowned Holy Roman Emperor by the pope at Rome. This was the beginning of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation which endured until 1806. The German princes elected and crowned the king of Germany and the papal coronation made him Holy Roman Emperor. After 1530 the papal coronation was dispensed with. The right of choosing the sovereign became gradually the privilege of a select few of the German princes. By the Golden Bull of Charles IV issued in 1356, the following seven princes were designated as imperial electors: the king of Bohemia, the duke of Saxony, the margrave of Brandenburg, the elector palatine of the Rhine (the capital of the Palatinate was Heidelberg) and the archbishops of Trier, Mainz, and Cologne. To these were added in the seventeenth century the electors of Bavaria and Hanover. The Holy Roman Empire in the Middle Ages included the present German Empire (with the exception of the Prussian provinces of East and West Prussia and Posen), the present Cisleithan Austria (without Carinthia, Bukovina, and Dalmatia), Switzerland, the northern half of Italy, a great part of what is now eastern France (the Arlesian territories, Upper Lorraine, etc.) the present kingdom of the Netherlands, most of Belgium and Luxembourg.

In Italy the authority of the German emperor had been set aside before the close of the thirteenth century. Swiss cantons emancipated themselves from their overlordship by the close of the Middle Ages, the nominal dependence of the Northern lands was declared at an end by the Peace of Westphalia in 1648. In the course of centuries Germany became split up into hundreds of states, some large, others not extending beyond the walls of a small town. There were duchies, principalities, margravates, lordgraves, counties, lordships, and free imperial cities (each a little republic) and the ecclesiastical principalities including archbishoprics, bishoprics, and abbeys. There was one kingdom, Bohemia, down to 1701 when the elector of Brandenburg assumed the title of King of Prussia. This mediocrity of ruling powers was represented in the Imperial Diet (Reichstag) which was convened down to the seventeenth century by the emperor at his pleasure, but which finally met regularly at Ratisbon. From 1658 (with slight interruption) the imperial throne of Germany was occupied by the Austrian dynasty of the Hapsburgs. Austria became an overshadowing power in the empire in which there was no single state powerful enough to oppose her until the rise of Prussia. The Napoleonic wars brought about the dissolution of the Holy Roman (or German) Empire. The Emperor Francis II in 1804 assumed the title of Emperor of Austria (Francis I) and in 1806 laid down the imperial crown of Germany. On the downfall of Napoleon the German states, now reduced to thirty nine in number formed the German Confederation which had no head and in which Austria and Prussia were the controlling powers. The representative body in the German Confederation was the Bundestag or Federal Diet, in which the individual states as each were represented. The war between Prussia and Austria in 1866 brought about the dissolution of the German Confederation. Austria was ejected from the Germanic body. Prussia absorbed Hanover, Hesse-Cassel, Nassau and Frankfurt, Schleswig (which had hitherto not been a part of Germany) and Holstein, having been liberated from Danish rule in 1864, were incorporated with Prussia. Under the lead of Prussia the North German Confederation was established in 1866, embracing Germany north of the Main. This had a Bundestag, or Federal Council and a national parliament or Reichstag. The Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71 united the South German states (Bavaria, Württemberg and Baden) with the states comprising the North German Confederation and a new German Empire was established, with a hereditary head, the king of Prussia, a Bundestag, and a Reichstag. William I. was crowned German emperor at Versailles on Jan. 18, 1871. The grand-duchy of Luxembourg and the principality of Liechtenstein remained detached from the Germanic body. By the treaty of Frankfurt, in 1871, France ceded Alsace and the German speaking part of Lorraine to the German Empire. The position of Germany as a collecting power may be said to date from 1884, when she engaged in the work of colonization in Africa.

There are about 30,000,000 Germans outside of the German Empire. Of these nearly half inhabit Cisleithan Austria, a large portion of which, in an ethnographic sense, may be said to form part of a greater Germany. Hungary has over 2,000,000 Germans, and Switzerland (where they constitute two-thirds of the population) has an equal number. The largest body of Germans dwelling outside of their own country (Germany and Austria) is to be found in the United States, where the German-born population amounts to about 3,000,000. The number of Germans in Russia is between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000. There is a large German population in the Argentine Republic and Brazil.

Germany, a post-hamlet of Pike co. Ohio.
Germany, a township of Adams co. Pa. on the Maryland boundary line. Pop. in 1900, 1027.

Germany, a post-hamlet of Warren co. Pa.
Germersheim, ghêr-mêr-hîm (see Vicus Juvis) a fortified town of Bavaria, in the Palatinate on the Rhine, 8 miles SSW of Speyer. Pop. in 1900, 5898.

Ghena, ghén (Fr. Gand, ghr Flem. Grand, ghet; Sp. Ganda, ghá Gor Gand, ghént L. Ganda and Gandarra), a city of Belgium, capital of East Flanders, at the confluence of the Lys with the Scheldt, 21 miles NW of Brussels. It is traversed by a series of canals and water-ways, forming a sort of network within the town and dividing it into 23 islands which are connected by over 60 bridges. The quaint aspect which the city with its old gabled houses and narrow streets formerly presented is gradually vanishing before the broad streets and open places which have been laid out. Among the most noteworthy of the squares are the Market Place of Friday (Marché du Vendredi) the scene of the most important events in the history of Ghent, and the Kouter or Parade, the fashionable promenade of the city. The principal ecclesiastical buildings of Ghent are the cathedral of St. Bavo founded in the tenth century with a famous pulpit and beautiful interior decorations; the towered church of St. Nicholas, one of the oldest buildings in the city; the church of St. Michael and the church of St. Peter recently restored. Among the secular edifices worthy of notice are the Gothic cloth hall (1326), the town hall (1018-33), with a beautiful late-Gothic earth facade; the Skipper's House the finest Gothic guild-house in Belgium; the Chateau des Comtes, the seat of the counts of Flanders; the bellry famous for its 44 bells; the museum in the old Augustinian Abbey the buildings of the university (founded in 1516) and the Institut des Sciences. The city has a zoological and a botanical garden. The Béguinage, a sort of nunnery, forms a little town of itself.

Ghent reached the height of its industrial prosperity in the fifteenth century and is still of great commercial importance. It has long been famous for the product of its looms. It has iron-foundries and manufactures of lace, machinery, leather paper and tapestries. Horticulture is carried on on a large scale. The town has a good harbor and an active trade in grain, rapeseed oil and flax. Ghent is a bishop's see.

The origin of Ghent is uncertain. It is first mentioned as a town in the seventh century, but does not appear to have acquired much importance till the twelfth century. By the end of the thirteenth century it was nearly as large as at present, and much larger than Paris then was. In the bloody feud which agitated Flanders up to the middle of the fourteenth century Ghent took a leading part, and repeatedly by the turbulence of its citizens provoked a fearful retribution. In 1384 when the county of Flanders passed by marriage to the house of Burgundy Ghent followed its fortunes. It rose unsuccessfully against its new rulers in the middle of the next century. Charles the Bold was crowned at Ghent in 1467. Here the marriage of his daughter Mary of Burgundy with Maximilian of Austria was celebrated in 1477 and here Charles V. was born in 1500. The Ghenters, having resisted the power of Charles, were terribly chastised in 1540. Ghent suffered much during the aggressions of Louis XIV. the campaigns of Marlborough, and the wars of the French revolution, but by the advantages of its position and the industry of its citizens it overcame these calamities. Pop. in 1590 153,740 in 1900, 160,940.

Lat. 36° 7' N., lon. 5° 21' W. This rock-fortress is connected with the continent by a low sandy isthmus 1½ miles long and ¼ mile broad, having the Bay of Gíbraltar on the W and the open sea of the Mediterranean on the E. Near the point of junction of the isthmus with the main land are the "panish fíles" between which and the rock is a space called the Neutral Ground. The highest point of the rock known as Highest Point, is 1300 feet above sea-level, its N face is almost perpendicular while its E side is full of forbidding precipices. It terminates at its S extremity in Europa Point. The W side is less steep than the E and between its base and the sea is a narrow level, on which the town is built. The higher slopes, although appearing barren are fairly overgrown with vegetation, of which the cactus forms a striking feature. Partridges, rabbits, and a troop of Barbary apes constitute a portion of the fauna.

Numerous caverns and galleries, extending from 2 to 3 miles in length and of sufficient width for carriages have been cut in the solid rock forming sheltered communications from one part of the garrison to another. Along these galleries, at intervals of every few yards, are port-holes bearing upon the central ground and bay while trees, shrubs, and flowers of various kinds have been planted at different points, both for ornament and utility. The signal station is located at a height of 1293 feet. St. Michael's Cave, the entrance to which is 1690 feet above the sea, contains a hall 250 feet in length. Of late years the fortifications have been carefully strengthened at every vulnerable point.

The town of Gíbraltar consists of the North Town as town proper the suburban South Town, and the Light house. The principal buildings are the governor's residence, known as the Convent, the admiralty naval hospital exchange, victualling-office and barracks, and a handsome theatre. Gíbraltar is the see of an Anglican bishop and there are Protestant and Roman Catholic churches Jewish synagogues, regimental and public schools, public libraries, etc. The Anglican cathedral or Church of the Holy Trinity is in the Moorish style of architecture. The Alameda, a central garden, luxuriant in its floral growth, is the most attractive point of the city. Gíbraltar is a free port and an entrepôt for the distribution of British manufactures to the countries bordering on the Mediterranean Sea, and it is the seat of a large contraband trade with Spain. The importation of live-stock from Galicia (Spain) and Morocco constitutes a large part of its trade. Gíbraltar is a crown-colony of Great Britain, the administration of which is vested in the governor who is also commander-in-chief of the troops; the power of enacting laws is vested in the governor alone, there being no legislative or executive council. All criminal cases are determined according to the laws of England.

Glasgow, glásgo (L. Glasgus) the industrial and commercial metropolis of Scotland and, next to London, the most populous city of Great Britain in the co. of Lennox on both sides of the river Clyde, 42 miles W. by S. of Edinburgh and 406½ miles by rail NW. of London. Lat. of observatory 55° 52' 42" N. lon. 4° 31' 38" W. It is one of the best built cities of Great Britain with broad spacious streets lined with handsome residences, a fine river frontage, and several open squares. Of these the most important are Glasgow Green in the SE. of the city a broad stretch along the river containing Nelson's monument the People's Palace, a museum art gallery and winter garden George square, the finest park of the city surrounded by splendid public buildings and containing, in addition to a column 80 feet high to the memory of Walter Scott, equestrian statues of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort, and statues of Lord Pitt, Gladstone Burns and others, West End Park crossed by the river Kelvin and containing the Stewart Memorial Fountain and the Corporation Art Galleries including the City Industrial Museum (1901) Queen's Park in the SW. of the city and Alexandra Park in the extreme E. Of the streets the most important are Buchanan's Buchanan's Union, and Argyle Glasgow contains many handsome buildings although, with the exception of the cathedral, none are of historic interest. The cathedral built between 1197 and 1446 in the early English Gothic style, is widely remarkable for its richly ornamented and exceedingly beautiful crypt. It has recently been embellished with superb stained-glass windows. The municipal buildings, post-office, Bank of Scotland Merchant House and many others, all fronting on George Square, are massive and perfectly proportioned edifices. Among other noteworthy structures are the new buildings of the university. The University of Glasgow was founded in 1451 by Bishop Turnbull. It is attended by over 2000 students. Its library contains 175 000 volumes. To the university belongs the Hunterian Museum with its famous anatomical collection. The Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College, founded in 1856 has a large attendance. Among other noteworthy institutions are St. Mungo's College and Anderson's College, the Mitchell Library containing about 150 000 volumes, the Corporation Public Libraries, and the Glasgow Art Gallery and Museum.

The extraordinary growth of Glasgow and its development as a commercial city are due to the fact of its situation on the river Clyde and to its location in a rich coal and iron region. About half a century ago the Clyde at Glasgow was so shallow that it could be loaded, but as a result of a vast outlay of money upon engineering works of great magnitude the harbor has been enlarged so as to permit of large ocean steamers lying at anchor in it. There are over 8 miles of quay. Glasgow Bridge, crossing the Clyde, was rebuilt in 1899. In the extent of its seaborne marine Glasgow is surpassed by few cities in the world. In 1902 it comprised 1586 vessels (1141 steamers) with an aggregate tonnage of 1,664,852. The banks of the Clyde are lined with ship-building and engineering works. The other great industries of the town include the manufacture of steam tubes, boilers, locomotives, machinery for sugar-mills, muslins and other textiles, chemicals, starch, sugar, paper, glass, china, tobacco, whiskey and beer. Spinning and dyeing are extensively carried on. The St. Rollox Chemical Works, with a chimney 435 feet high, exceeded in height only by a neighboring one of 458 feet, are famous. The water-supply of Glasgow is drawn from Loch Katrine, 42 miles distant. Among the suburbs of Glasgow are Govan and Partick with a combined population of 135,000. The city of Paisley is in the outskirts.

Glasgow is a very ancient city. It came into existence in 860 when St. Kentigern built an abbey on the site of the present cathedral. In 1636 it became a royal burgh but it was not until the union in 1707 that it rose to industrial importance. Then by the opportunities for trade with America offered to it, it entered on its career of commercial prosperity. Glasgow is the seat of a Roman Catholic bishopric and of an Anglican bishop. Glasterbury, gläster-ber, a post-township (town), of Bennington co., Vt., about 10 miles NE of Bennington. Pop. in 1900, 45.

Glasterbury, an ancient municipal borough of England, co. of Somerset, 23 miles SW of Bath occupying a peninsula formed by the river Brue. It presents a quaint appearance. The most interesting feature of the town is the ruin of the ancient abbey founded in the eighth century by King Ine and replaced in the tenth century by another built by St. Dunstan. This abbey, which was the sepulchre of several of the early English kings was burned in 1184, and on its site a handsome minster was begun by Henry II, which was not dedicated till 1193. The ruins of the abbey were long used as a stone-quarry and consequently its remains are very scanty. There still stands, however on the site of the Vestrae Noctula, the roofless chapel of Our Lady or St. Joseph in Transition Norman with a fifteenth century crypt. Other structures of interest are the Abbot's Kitchen, with four huge fireplaces and a pyramidal roof. George Inn originally an inn for pilgrims to the abbey the so-called Tribunal, Abbot's Barn and the church of St. John the Baptist, with a fine perpendicular tower. The town has manufactures of sheep skins, mats, rugs, gloves, and pottery. Glasterbury has been traditionally identified with the Avalon of the Arthurian legends. Gloster, glov'ter (anc. Gloosm, later L. Claudia Castra), a city and county borough of England, within the territorial limits of the co. of Gloucester on the E. bank of the Severn, 33 miles NNE. of Bristol. The old Roman ground-plan of the city still survives in the four streets which meet at right angles in the middle of the town at what is known as the Cross. Below some of the houses in these streets remains of the Roman walls may be seen. The nunnery which existed in Gloucester as early as the seventh century gave way to a monastery about 870 which was in turn succeeded by a great Benedictine abbey. The abbey church became the nucleus for the cathedral which was built from 1083-1498. This structure, though substantially Norman is in reality perpendicular in character. It has a central tower rising 125 feet and containing the famous Great Peter, a bell weighing nearly 3 tons, a splendid east window the largest in England, with magnificent stained glass (1350) and the exquisite shrine of King Edward II with a handsome canopy. The fan vaulted cloisters are unmatched in England. Among the other interesting buildings of Gloucester are the new episcopal palace, the picturesque twelfth century deanery, the West Gate, the New Inn (built about 1460 for pilgrims) and the Tolsey or gold-hall. Gloucester has car and engineering-works, flour mills, iron foundries, ship-building yards, and manufactures of agricultural implements, cutlery, chemicals, soap, and matches. provinces and formerly of a Moorish kingdom of its own name, beautifully situated partly on two spurs of the Sierra Nevada and partly on the level land between them. The river Guadil flows past the town and the picturesque Darro through it. Granada is divided into four quarters: Albarracín, occupying one of the hills with the famous fortress and palace of the Alhambra; a suburb, on another hill once the proud abode of Moorish nobles, now the poorest part of the city and the home of gypsies; Antegueruela, another suburb; and on the level ground between the two hills, the town proper divided by the Darro. Granada, in spite of its labyrinth of narrow and dirty streets and its many decayed houses presents, with its numerous gardens its towers and magnificent buildings, a wonderful appearance. Among the many buildings of interest, the most remarkable is the old Moorish palace of the Alhambra, situated on a plateau once surrounded by massive walls and towers commanding an extraordinary view. The Alhambra is plain on the outside, but of most complex and elaborate workmanship within. Its Court of Myrtles, with a great fortified tower and beautiful arcades, the richly ornamented Hall of the Ambassadors, the celebrated Court of the Lions with a remarkable fountain the airy like Hall of the Two Sultans, and many other smaller apartments render the Alhambra the most charming embodiment of Moorish art. Among the other fine edifices of Granada are the magnificent, though unfinished palace of Charles V. the Generalife, or summer residence, of the Moorish princes the cathedral (begun in 1523) is the main the best monument of the Renaissance period in Spain. The Capilla Real (1506-17) in late-Gothic style, the burial chapel of the Catholic Kings, with splendid monuments of marble the Puerta Judiciaria (a Moorish tower gate-way) and the Alcazaba, with its ruins of the old walls and towers, practically all that remains of the original fortress. Granada possesses a university founded in 1531. The chief industries are the manufacture of textiles, paper and hats. There are distilleries. Granada was founded early in the Middle Ages near the site of the ancient Illiberis. About 1235 it became the capital of a Moorish kingdom which attained to almost matchless splendor. Its population at this period has been estimated as high as 700,000. In 1492 it remained the last stronghold of the Moors in Spain, defending itself against Ferdinand and Isabella who took possession of it at the beginning of 1492. After the expulsion of the Moors from Spain Granada declined rapidly. Pop. in 1900 73,900.

Great Basin, plateau, bounded on the E by the Wasatch Mountains and on the W by the Sierra Nevada. It comprises the western part of Utah, nearly all the state of Nevada, and a portion of southeastern California, extending E and W about 450 miles, with a width nearly equal to its length. The surface is diversified by numerous mountain ridges, rising from a table-land, the lowest part of which is nearly 4500 feet above the level of the sea. Fresh water is scarce in this vast basin, the rivers of which except on the immediate SB border send no tribute to the ocean, but either sink in the desert sand, evaporate or flow into some saline lake. Among the remarkable features of this basin is Great Salt Lake. Other lakes are Humboldt, Sevier, Pyramid, Carson, and Walker. The chief streams flowing in this basin are the Humboldt and Sevier rivers. In a recent geological period two vast lakes, with their levels standing at high elevations occupied considerable areas of the basin. Lake Lahontan in the NW and Lake Bonneville, of which the present Great Salt Lake is a relict, in the SE. The mountains of this region being seemingly formed as monoclinical uplifts or through unsuccessional fault-breakages, have been thought to exemplify a new type of mountain construction and have been designated Basin Ranges. The quantity of rain that falls here is small and irrigation is required to render the soil productive. The basin is nearly destitute of timber.

Great Britain, or Britannia, Britannia (L. Britannia) the largest island of Europe, containing England Wales and Scotland. Previous to 1707 England and Scotland were separate kingdoms, which for the space of a century had been united under one crown. In that year the legislative union was effected, and thus was formed the kingdom of Great Britain. The legislative union of Ireland with Great Britain dates from 1801. The British Isles constitute the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland frequently called simply the United Kingdom. Great Britain is separated from the continent by the English Channel, the Strait of Dover and the North Sea. Lizard Point, its southern extremity is in lat. 49° 07' 53" N., Dunnet Head, in Caithness, the most northerly point, in lat. 58° 46' 24" N. The most easterly point is Lowestoft, on the coast of Suffolk, in lon. 1° 44' E., the most westerly, Airdnamurchan Point, in the N. part of Argyllshire, Scotland, in lon. 6° 15' W. The distance from Lizard Point to Dunnet Head is about 606 miles. The greatest breadth of the island from Land's End to the easternmost part of Kent, is about 330 miles. Area (inclusive of islands but excluding the Isle of Man) 82,130 sq. m. (England and Wales, 58,324 sq. m. Scotland 20,796 sq. m.) The eastern coast forms a waving and continuous though not unbroken line, but the western coast is extremely irregular and deeply indented with many bays and arms of the sea, interspersed with numerous islands. The SE. part of Great Britain is a level alluvial surface, the centre undulating and hilly the W and NW mountainous and irregular. A series of mountain elevations more or less continuous in their ramifications and interlocking spurs, but constituting distinct orographic and geologic systems occupies the greater part of the W and N beginning at Land's End, in Cornwall, and covering a large part of Wales, the western and northwestern counties of England and most of Scotland. Among the better known groups or subdivisions of these mountains are the Cotswold Hills of Gloucestershire, the Cambrian Mountains (in Wales) the Pennine Chain the Cheviot Hills (forming much of the boundary between England and Scotland) and the Grampians (with the Highlands) in Scotland. The highest elevation in England is Ben Nevis, in Cumberland, 9310 feet, the highest in Wales, Mount Snowdon 3600 ft., and in Scotland the culminating point of the British Isles, Ben Nevis, 4406 ft. (For a fuller account of the relief of the land, see EVORA, SCOTLAND, and WALES.) The largest rivers are the Severn, the Mersey and Clyde, on the W and the Thames, Trent and Ouse (with their estuary the Humber) Tees, Tyne, Tyne, Forth, Tay, Don (of Scotland) and Spey on the E. The principal lakes are those of Cumberland and Westmorland in England, and Loch Lomond, Tay Ness, and Moray, in Scotland. Loch Lomond, noted for its beautiful scenery has an area of about 24 sq. m. A distinctive structural feature of the land is the deep depression known as Glen More, or the Great Glen which in Scotland separates the NW Highlands from the Highlands of the SE and which is in great part occupied by a chain of linear lakes (Ness, Loch, Lochy). The principal bays and estuaries are the Bristol Channel Cardigan Bay Morecambe Bay Solway Firth Firth of Clyde, Firth of Lorn and the Merch on the W the estuary of the Thames the Wash the Humber and the firths of Forth Tay Mersey and Cromarty on the E while on the S there are Falmouth, Plymouth and Portsmouth harbors, Spithead, and the broad Lyme Bay.

The British Isles or United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, form an archipelago of hundreds of islands and rocks. The principal islands and groups are Britain, Ireland, the Isle of Wight, Anglesa, Man the Shetland Islands, Bute, Arran the Outer and Inner Hebrides, Orkney and Shetland. The Channel Islands, lying off the coast of France, belong to Great Britain. All of these parts lie virtually in an area of comparatively shallow water or on a subcontinental plateau or bank and give unmistakable evidence of having at no ancient period been dismembered from the European main. In the N. Scotland was united with Norway and in the E. England with France. A large (or even the greater) part of the North Sea is of (geologically) modern formation perhaps not antedating the first appearance of man. Area of the archipelago 121,021 sq. m. Pop. in 1871 31,029,299 in 1891 37,838,153 in 1901 41,609,330 in 1870, upward of 45,000,000. Being surrounded by the ocean and having the drift of the Gulf Stream washing the W coast, the mean annual temperature of the British Isles is equal to that of countries in much lower latitudes on the continent of Europe while the winter temperature is much higher. The mean annual temperature of the central parts of the archipelago is about 48° Fahr. that of Uxet, in Shetland, being 44.5° and of Cornwall in the extreme S 51.5°. The average July temperature of London is 64°. The coldest region in winter is the E. between the neighborhood of London and Shetland, where the January temperature is 39°. The average annual rainfall is about 33.5 inches. On the western edge of the Scottish Highlands the rainfall is about 80 inches in the Lake District of England and in parts of Cornwall and Devon 60 inches and in the region of the Thames, less than 25 inches. Though variable, the climate of Great Britain is markedly subarctic. The indigenous vegetation partakes of the character of that of the oceanic parts of Europe, and contains few or no species peculiar to the archipelago. All the grains and grasses and the common European fruits, grow in almost all situations not too elevated, and both agriculture and horticulture have been brought to great perfection. The breeds of horses, cattle, sheep, and swine are of the best description. Of wild animals the fox, badger, wild-cat, stoat, marten, otter, hare, and rabbit are the principal. The brown bear, wolf wild boar and beaver which inhabited the region in the Roman period, have long since been exterminated. The stag and fallow deer are still preserved. Many of the mammals occurring in the major island, as the roebuck, polecat, brown hare, certain weasels, and the field mice are wanting in Ireland, where, likewise, there is no serpent of any kind. The viper is the only poisonous serpent found elsewhere in the region. Of the total area of the United Kingdom, 37,156,000 acres (48 per cent.) were under crops and grass in 1903. 23,412,000 acres (30 per cent.) were grazing lands and heaths and 3,638,000 acres, woodland and plantations. The corn crops (excluding Ireland) covered 7,184,200 acres green crops, 3,147,888 acres hops, 48,631 acres and flax 834 acres (9394 in 1874). In Ireland the corn and green crops covered 2,377,000 acres. The average of wheat in Great Britain in 1903 was 1,581,457 (less than one-half of the acreage in 1874) of barley 1,958,484 oats 3,140,942 beans, 238,201, peas, 180,858 potatoes, 584,286 turnips, 1,603,301. For Ireland the figures were wheat, 37,054 (one-fifth of the acreage in 1874) barley 158,688 oats, 1,097,512 beans, 3075 peas, 289 potatoes, 620,594 turnips, 287,556. The annual production of wheat in Great Britain in recent years has averaged somewhat over 50,000,000 bushels in Ireland a little over 1,500,000 bushels. The average annual yield of potatoes in the British Isles is about 0,000,000 tons Ireland raising nearly as much as the whole of Great Britain. The average yield of wheat per acre in Great Britain is about 30 bushels in Ireland it is about 10 per cent. greater. A peculiar feature of the agriculture in Great Britain is the comparatively small number of holdings; this is not the case in Ireland. The number of sheep in Great Britain in 1903 was 25,765,756 cattle, 0,555,976 and swine, 3,209,567. In Ireland the cattle, sheep and swine numbered collectively 16,400,000. The total value of the product of metals from British ores in 1901 was £13,917,433. Of this the iron product was £12,826,622 tin £554,571 (representing 4560 tons of ore) lead £254,599 copper £37,461 (representing 532 tons of ore) gold (£235 ounces) £32,643 and silver, £19,764. The coal product, represented by 218,646,645 tons, was valued at £102,456,153. Of the total coal output, England mined 153,000,000 tons, Scotland, 32,000,000 tons, Wales, 32,000,000 tons and Ireland, 103,000 tons. The total number of persons employed in and about the mines of the United Kingdom was, in 1901, 639,172.

The manufacturing industries of Great Britain, whose rapid development was due to the large stores and close association of active coal and iron and to the numerous navigable waters surpass in extent those of every country in the world with the exception of the United States. Of first importance is the textile industry the value of the exports of which constitute more than one-third the value of the total exports of the United Kingdom, being in 1902 cotton manufactures and yarn £72,453,217 woollens and worsteds, £20,408,600 linens and apparel, £6,391,775. The centre of the cotton industry is located in Lancashire, England (Manchester, Oldham, Preston, Blackburn, etc.). Among the great seats of the textile industry outside of England are Glasgow (cottons) Dundee (linens) and Belfast (linens). Paisley manufactures vast quantities of cotton thread and Dublin is noted for its poplins. Among the chief seats of the woolen industry are Huddersfield, Bradford, Leeds, and Dewsbury. Halifax and Kidderminster are noted for their carpets. Next in importance to the textile industry is the manufacture of metal goods and machinery special distinction having been obtained in the manufacture of steel pens, pins and needles, hardware and ordnance, and locomotives. Prominent in this field are Birmingham, Sheffield, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Glasgow, Coatbridge, Wolverhampton, Bradford, Leeds, Bolton, Oldham and Stockton. The ship-building industry the chief centre of which is the Clyde, is also of the first importance. Other important manufactures are those of hosiery (Nottingham, Leicester) pottery (the greater number of factories of which are located in the Potteries, a district in Staffordshire) chemicals, paper, leather (which employs 400,000 workers) books, etc. There were, in 1899, 6989 breweries the beer brewed in 1900-01 being valued at £13,940,536. The production of whiskeys and other spirituous liquors is also very large. The total value of British products exported in 1903 was £282,539,969 and of foreign and colonial products, £45,814,813 the value of the imports, £232,860,284. Of the last, the articles of food and drink were valued at £210,000,000 and the raw materials for textile manufactures at £78,570,000. The British fisheries are among the most important in the world. The number of men employed in 1901 was approximately 104,000, and the value of the fish landed was (excluding salmon and shell-fish) £2,044,562. The number of sailing vessels of the United Kingdom engaged in the home and foreign trade in 1901 was 7036 of steam vessels, 7548; total tonnage, 9,534,406. The total number of vessels entering the different ports was 251,117 registering 184,410,127 tons. Among the chief seaports are London, Liverpool, New castle-upon-Tyne, Bristol, Hull, Southampton, Newport, Dover and Grimsby in England. Cardiff and Swansea in Wales. Glasgow, Greenock, Leith (the port of Edinburgh), Dundee, and Aberdeen in Scotland, and Dublin, Belfast, and Cork in Ireland. The chief naval ports are Chatham, Portsmouth and Plymouth.

The railroad mileage in 1901 was 22,678; the operating lines having in England and Wales 15,308 miles, in Scotland 3562 miles, and in Ireland 3268 miles. The length of canals was, in 1898, 3907 miles, the traffic-tonnage of which was upward of 39,000,000.

The following cities of the United Kingdom had over 200,000 inhabitants in 1901: London (the capital of England and of the British Empire), Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Sheffield, Belfast, Bristol, Edinburgh (the capital of Scotland), Dublin (the capital of Ireland), Bradford, West Ham, Hull, Nottingham, Salford, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and Leicester.

The government of Great Britain is a limited monarchy. The constitution is a fabric evolved gradually through the course of centuries and is in great part unwritten. The legislative authority is vested in the Parliament (Lords and Commons). The members of the House of Lords comprise peers of the blood royal, English bishops, English peers hereditary and created (dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, barons, all of whom are life peers) Scotch representative peers (elected for duration of parliament) and Irish representative peers (elected for life) numbering in all about 600. The House of Commons consists of 700 members (of whom 277 represent the counties, 284 the parliamentary boroughs and 0 the universities) 495 of whom are chosen by the electors of England and Wales, 103 by those of Ireland and 2 by those of Scotland. Parliament meets in annual session, and the duration of a parliament is limited to seven years. The government is conducted by a prime minister who is always the head of the political party which happens to be in power, assisted by a cabinet. The composition of the cabinet is not always the same, the number of members varying from about a dozen to about 20. The cabinet is generally presumed to include the first lord of the treasury, the lord chancellor, the lord president of the council, the lord privy seal, the chancellor of the exchequer, the first lord of the admiralty and the five secretaries of state—viz., for home affairs, foreign affairs, for the colonies, for India, and for war. Among other officials who are likely to be included in the cabinet are the chief secretary for Ireland, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, the post master-general, and the president of the board of trade. The president of the local government board and one or two other officials may also be given seats. The Episcopalian form of church government, of which the sovereign is the head, is the state-established religion in England, and the Presbyterian form that of Scotland. For the history of Great Britain see BRITANNIA.

The British Empire is the largest in the world, extending into every zone and climate, comprising one-fifth of the land area of the globe, and embracing under its rule about one-fourth of the population of the world. The lands belonging to or controlled by England have an area of about 11,000,000 sq. m. and a pop. of about 400,000,000. The area and population of its chief divisions are given in the following table:

Great Paradise Key, Bahamas. See Paradise.

Great Pedee, S.C. See Pedee, Great.

Great (or Sandy) Point, the N. extremity of Nantucket Island, Mass. It has a fixed light. Lat. $41^{\circ} 23' N$.

Great Pond, a post-village of Hancock co., Me. on the S. shore of Great Pond, 28 miles E. of Milford. Pop. 80.

Great Popo, Guinea. See Grass Popo.

Great River, a post-village of Suffolk co., N.Y. on the Long Island R. The banking point is Bayshore. Pop. about 400.

Great Saint Bernard. See Saint Bernard.

Great Salt Lake, Utah. It is in the NE part of the Great Basin and at the W. base of the Wasatch Mountains. It is about 80 miles long, with a breadth varying from 20 to 30 miles. The surface is 4218 feet above the level of the sea. This lake has no outlet. Its principal tributaries are the Bear, Jordan, and Weber rivers, all of which enter at the E. side. It encloses several islands, one of which, Antelope Island, is about 18 miles long. The water is a saturated solution of common salt (chloride of sodium) and in 1850 contained 32.4 per cent. of solid matter (chiefly chloride of sodium) in minor quantities, chloride of magnesium and sulphate of soda, etc., an amount which has since been considerably reduced. In 1869 it was but 15 per cent. The greatest depth is about 48 feet. Several species of insects and a brine-shrimp have been found in these waters. The lake is merely a relic of a former much larger body of water in which geologists have given the name of Lake Bonneville, the ancient upper terrace line of which stands nearly 1000 feet above the present surface. The present waters are subject to considerable fluctuations, having at this time an average depth of only 13 feet, the same as 50 years ago, while in 1869 the depth was about 26 feet. The rise of the waters during the wet cycle of 1865-1885 was 13 feet the fall between 1885 and 1904, 11.5 feet. Gardfield Beach, a much frequented bathing resort, is on the E. coast.

Great Shemogue (shem-o'-groe) or Bristol, a post-village of Westmoreland co., New Brunswick 10 miles from Shediac.

Great Slave Lake, a large lake of Canada, lies between lat. $66^{\circ} 40'$ and $63^{\circ} 40'$ N. and lon. $103^{\circ} 30'$ and $118^{\circ} 30'$ W. It is about 300 miles long and 80 miles wide at the broadest part. Area about 10,000 sq. m. Its form is very irregular. It is partly supplied with water by the Great Slave and Hay rivers and other streams. The bulk of its surplus water is discharged through the Mackenzie River, which issues from its W. end. A part of it finds its way into Hudson Bay through the Arctik-Umik River. Elevation, 391 feet.

Great Slave River, of Canada, is formed by the Peace River after it is joined by the Stony River from Lake Athabasca. It enters Great Slave Lake on its S. side, by two mouths near Fort Resolution. Total course, 300 miles. Fort Smith is the head of navigation for the sea.

Great South Bay, N.Y. is on the S. side of Long Island, about midway between its E. and W. extremities, and is partly separated from the ocean by a long and narrow strip of land called Great South Beach.

Great Torrington, a municipal borough of Devonshire, England. Pop. in 1901 3241.

Great Valley, or Killbuck, a post-village of Cattaraugus co., N.Y. in Great Valley township (town) on the Allegheny River and on the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh R. 40 miles SSE. of Dunkirk. Pop. about 500 at the town in 1900 1897.

Great Village, a maritime town of Nova Scotia co. of Colchester near the head of Cheboudi Bay 3 miles from Londonderry. It has a foundry, etc., with a shipping trade. Pop. about 600.

Great Works, a post-village of Penobscot co., Me. on the Penobscot River and on the Maine Central R., 11 miles above Bangor. It has manufacturers of lumber and chemical fibre. Pop. about 600.

Great Yarmouth, England. See Yarmouth.

Grebenstein, 'grä-ben-stein', a town of Prussia, in Hanse-Nassau, 11 miles NNW. of Cassel. Pop. about 1000.

Greble, 'grä-b'l', a post-village of Lebanon co., Pa., about 35 miles W. by N. of Reading.

Grecian Archipelago. See Ionian Sea.

Greece (Gr. Ellas, Hellas L. Griecia), a kingdom of southern Europe, occupying the extremity of the easternmost of the three great peninsulas of the continent, the Balkan Peninsula. It is situated between lat. 36° and $46^{\circ} N$ and lon. 18° and $26^{\circ} E$. (including the islands); bounded N. by European Turkey (Macedonia), W. by European Turkey (Epirus) from which it is separated by the Arta, and the Ionian Sea, S. by the Mediterranean, and E. by the Aegean Sea. Area, 26,614 sq. m. It is composed of a continental portion, which comprises Hellas in the N. and the peninsula of the Morea (anc. Peloponnese) in the S. and of an insular portion consisting of the islands in the Aegean Sea and the Ionian Islands. Hellas and the Morea are almost separated by the gulfs of Patras and Lepanto on the W. and the Gulf of Argina (Saronic Gulf) on the E. the connecting strip of land the Isthmus of Corinth, being in its narrowest part, where it is pierced by a ship-canal, only about 4 miles across.

The territory of Greece is nearly all mountainous, the western portion of Hellas being occupied by prolongations and spurs of the Dinaric Alps, which are continued into the Ionian Islands and through the Morea, whence they are deflected in the direction of Asia Minor. Near the S. extremity of the Morea is Mount Taygetos (or St. Elias) 7910 feet in altitude. Running in a measure parallel with this chain is the range of the Pindus, which enters on the N. from Turkey, divides northern Greece into two nearly equal sections (an eastern and a western) and one of whose arms, Mount Othrys forms the greater part of the S. boundary of Thessaly. In the Peloponnesian branch of the Pindus is Mount Paricemus (or Liki) 8070 feet the culminating point of the kingdom. The heart of the Morea is largely of a ruggedly wild plateau character with deep ravines and valleys and barren limestone plains. The coasts are elevated, irregular and deeply indented the principal gulfs are those of Arta, Volo, Patras, Lepanto (or Corinth), Argina, Neopoli, Katakylas, Euboea (or Messana) and Arcadia. Chief capes are Marathon, Colonus (or Sunium) and Skrophis, all in Attica and Skillo, Mafis, Mistapan, Gelle and Klarentza in the Morea. Off the W. coast are the Ionian Islands. The large island of Euboea lies along the N.E. side of the main-land, from which it is separated by a long narrow channel called in its narrowest part Koripus. The other islands are mainly scattered over the Aegean Sea to the two groups of the Cyclades and the northern Sporades. Most of the Grecian islands appear to be disrupted parts of the main land tectonic dislocations having brought about breakages of various kinds. The region has been frequently visited by earthquakes. Volcanic phenomena are most active in the Santorin group of islands. Greece has numerous streams, but they are mostly rapid and unfit for navigation and the greater number not permanent. The principal are, in Hellas, the Aspropotamo (anc. Achelous) rising in Turkey, an affluent of the Ionian Sea the Salamvra (Penios), which flows into the Gulf of Paioniki the Phidaris which flows E. to the Gulf of Patras and the Nedida (Spercheios) an affluent of the Gulf of Larina and the Cephissus, which flows S. to the Gulf of Argina. The chief rivers in the Morea are the Roipia (Alpheus) in the W. and the Evrotas (Lil) in the E. The extensive lake of Topolus (anc. Copais) in Boeotia has been recently drained. Caverns, sinks and underground pipes or water passages (catachisms) are numerous in the limestone regions.

The climate is temperate and generally healthy except in some parts of the coasts. The summer, during which the vegetation of the lowlands in greater part withers, are hot and almost rainless. In some of the interior valleys the temperature not infrequently rises to 100° 105° and even higher at Athens the extreme is 166° . Winter is marked by rain in the plains and snow in the mountains the extreme of lowland cold is about 8° . The vegetable products vary according to the elevation of the soil. The olive, vine, fig, currant, grape, melon, rice, cotton, orange, citron and pomegranate thrive on the coasts and in districts situated at an elevation of 1000 feet, where also the myrtle, mastic and plane-tree flourish. The vegetation of the plains is composed in greater part of evergreen shrubs, with occasional woods of fir and oak. Above 6000 feet in elevation the mountains are in great part covered with pine forests. Agriculture is neglected, only one-seventh of the area being under cultivation. The annual current crop is about 150,000 tons the crop of valonia, the acorn-cup of a species of oak used in tanning was, in 1901 1460 tons. The annual wheat product is about 7,000,000 bushels, barley 3,600,000 bushels and rye 1,000,000 bushels. The principal domestic animals are sheep and goats, bees are raised. The wild animals include the stag, roebuck, fallow deer, bear, fox, jackal, wild-boar, ibex, and hare; and it would appear that during the Roman period even the lion (possibly also the hyena) was found among the mountain fastnesses. The bird-fauna is largely developed and in-stades many forms that are migrant from the African continent. The lake-borders and swamps teem with bird-life, swans, ducks and geese, pelicans, gulls, snipe, etc. Other birds are various herons, partridges the spoon-bill, lammergeier thrushes, and nightingale.

The mineral wealth of Greece is still largely undeveloped, although much ore has from time to time been extracted. The deposits of Laurium (see ENIGMA) a place famed in antiquity for its yield of silver are now worked for manganese, cadmium, iron, lead and silver the manganese-iron product in 1902 having been about 250,000 tons. Sulphur is found on Milo and in some of the volcanic islands. Lignite occurs at a number of localities, as do likewise gypsum, barites, salt, and magnesia. The marbles of Greece have long been famous.

Greece has few manufactures, property so called, but milk, cottons, woollens, chemicals, iron-ware, pottery, paper, soap, leather and beet-sugar are produced for domestic use and to some extent for export. Ship-building is carried on in a minor way. There were, in 1904, 640 miles of railroad in operation and about 300 miles were in course of construction. The chief resource of the inhabitants has always been in maritime commerce. The principal ports are Athens (the Piræus), Patras, Hydra, Corfu, Nauplia, Hermopolis (Syra), Volo and Kalamata. The exports are currants, valonia, wine, cotton and cotton yarn, olive-oil, tobacco, figs, sponges, emery, metals, etc. Greece is divided into 36 nomarchies—viz. Arta, Trikala, Kardhina, and Larissa, in northern Hellas; Euboea and Phthiotis, in middle Hellas; Magnesia (eastern Hellas) and the northern Sporades; Achaia and Etolia (one nomarchy), Phocia, Boeotia, and Attica, in southern Hellas; Achaia and Corinthia, in the V of the Morea; Argolis, in the E of the Morea; Laconia, Messenia, and Messenia, in the S of the Morea; Triphylia and Elis, in the W of the Morea; Arcadia, in the central part of the Morea; Euboea, the Cyclades, Corfu (Kerkira), Louka, Cephalonia (Kephallonia) and Zante (Zacynthos) embracing most of the islands. The population of Greece in 1896 was 2,433,006 or 97 to the square mile. About nine-tenths of the inhabitants are Greeks, the most numerous foreign element being the Albanians. The inhabitants of Greece comprise only about one-third of the Greek people. The Greek population of European Turkey is not greatly inferior in numbers to that of the Greek kingdom. Asia Minor the Turkish islands, and Crete contain together approximately as many Greeks as European Turkey. There is a considerable Greek population in Caucasus, Bulgaria, and other countries including the United States.

The government of Greece is a constitutional monarchy. The Greek church is the established religion to which nine-tenths of the people belong and which acknowledges the king as its temporal head. The chief educational institution is the university at Athens. There is an effective and well-sustained system of public instruction. The principal towns (with populations in 1896) are as follows: Athens the capital (pop. 111,426); Piræus 42,162; Patras 37,068; Trikala, 31,149; Corfu, 17,918; Hermopolis, Volo, Larissa, and Zante.

From the remotest historic times Greece was the scene of events of the greatest significance and interest, events which made it the cradle of European civilization. Among the principal facts, incidents, and landmarks of ancient Greek history are: The period of Mycenaean civilization (including the Heroic Age, as sung by the poets) previous to 1000 B.C.; establishment of the Dorians in the Peloponnese, according to the common account, about 1100 B.C.; composition of the Homeric poems (marking the development of Greek civilization in Asia Minor) between 1000 and 900 B.C.; the moulding of Sparta into a military state by the Lycurgus legislation about 800 B.C.; beginning of the Olympiads, 776 B.C.; establishment of Greek colonies along the shores of the Mediterranean and the Black Sea, about 750-650 B.C.; Sparta supplants Argos as the leading power in the Peloponnese, about 750 B.C.; migration of Solon at Athens, about 604 B.C.; first Persian invasion, 490 B.C.; invasion of Xerxes, 480 B.C.; the hegemony passes from Sparta to Athens, 477 B.C.; Pericles at the head of the Athenian state, 444-429 B.C.; Peloponnesian War (Sparta becomes dominant) 431-404 B.C.; Theban hegemony 371-362 B.C.; Macedonia imposes her yoke, 338 B.C.; Alexander the Great conquers the Persian Empire, 334-323 B.C.; rise of the Achæan League, about 286 B.C.; Roman conquest completed, 146 B.C.; Greece part of the Byzantine or Greek Empire, from A.D. 395. The age of the greatest development of Greek art, literature and philosophy was the period from about 600 to about 300 B.C. After the Roman conquest the nobler elements of the Greek character were less conspicuous, and were gradually lost. The Byzantine civilization was essentially Greek, though essentially Roman; but with the decline of the Byzantine power the Greek nationality entered upon a long period of lethargy and the people were afterwards handed over from master to master without even the semblance of a struggle. In 1204 Greece was partitioned among the Latin conquerors of Constantinople. These western invaders established the principality of Achaia and the duchy of Athens. The Turks put an end to the Byzantine Empire in 1453, and a few years later were masters of Greece. A period of the grossest misrule and oppression followed. At last, in 1821, the Greeks declared their determination to be free. A protracted struggle took place, but the issue was still doubtful when foreign powers interfered and compelled the Turks in 1829 to acknowledge Greece as an independent state. A royal government was instituted in 1832. The Ionian Islands were incorporated in the Greek kingdom in 1863-64. In 1831 the Ottoman dominions were enlarged at the expense of Turkey. In 1897 Greece having resolved to annex the island of Crete, where the Christians had taken up arms against the Mohammedans, engaged in a war with Turkey which ended disastrously.

Greenland (Dan. Grønland, grøn 'blond') an extensive region NE of North America, after Australia the largest insular land-mass of the globe, extending from Cape Farewell in the south, in lat. 59° 45' N. to the Peary Channel, which separates it from some closely adjoining land masses still farther north in about lat. 82°-83°. The NE apex of Greenland proper is Independence Bay in lat. 81° 37' the extreme northern point of the outlying land-masses (Hazen Melville, and Holstein Lands) which are structurally a part of Greenland, is Cape Morris Jessup, lat. 83° 39' Area, about 850,000 sq. m. Greenland is throughout most of its extent a mountainous country with elevations rising from 3000 to 8000 feet and more above the sea, the rugged mountain-heights descending in abrupt falls to the ocean and presenting a landscape closely similar to Norway and other parts of the Scandinavian peninsula. Deep and tortuous fjords, floating out thousands of icebergs—the debris of the descending glaciers—bight into the coast, extending inward in some cases to distances of 50-100 miles. The deep mountain-valleys of the interior have been obliterated by the accumulation through ages of drifting and fallen snow, which has built up the general level of the country beyond the mountain-crests themselves, so that the eye sees only a vast and uniform snow-mantled as ice-cap, sweeping and undulating between elevations of 4000 and 5000 feet. This great inland ice is the feeding-basin of Greenland's thousands of glaciers, many of which are among the largest in the world. Seemingly the largest of all known glaciers is the Humboldt, in the NW, which discharges into Kane Basin and is thought to have an ice-front of 45-50 miles. Other well-known glaciers on the W coast are the Petowik, Great Karakak, and Jakobshavn. The highest elevation thus far determined is Petermann Peak near the E coast, in about lat. 73° 45' and seemingly 9000 feet in height. The most extensive indentations of the coast are the Shearard Oboke Fjord, in the extreme NW, Petermann Fjord, Kane Basin, Ingledfield Gulf, Disko Bay, Scoresby Sound, and Fyana-Josef Fjord, the last two on the E coast.

While most of Greenland is eternally buried under snow and ice, much of the coast-strip is freed of its winter mantle during the summer months June-September, and appears covered, where the soil admits of plant growth, with a profuse vegetation of throbis, herbs, and mosses which are mostly of an Arctic character. The flowering plants now prize species of saxifrage, poppy anemone, ranunculus, draba, chickweed, starwort, crowberry, heath bellwort, etc. These are found associated with the Arctic birch and willow and in the S with the alder and other arborescent shrubs. The total number of flowering plants of Greenland is about 400, many of which are found quite to the northernmost extremity of the land. In the central and southern parts the Danes have introduced a minor garden cultivation in the raising of the cabbage, cress, radish, celery, turnip and potato.

The extremes of climate are well accentuated: the winter temperatures being of extreme severity, but in no way comparable to those of the pole of cold of Siberia. The temperature rarely falls over most of the region below -45° F. and the minimum recorded is -55° to -60°. In summer the shade temperature rises to 60° and more, and the sun temperature to about 85°.

The land fauna of Greenland is scanty and the mammals are reduced to hardly more than six Arctic types (lemming hare, fox, Polar bear, reindeer and musk ox, the last-named extending its range to the northern boundary). Among the birds are falcons, the raven, snow grouse, snow bunting, and myriads of little snipe that find refuge among the rock cliffs. The true inhabitants of Greenland are the Eskimos (Eskimoes), the pure stock of whom is now to be found only N of Melville Bay. These Greenlanders or Arctic Highlanders, are about 300 in number and extend their habitations from Cape York to about Etah. See Esquimaux.

The greater part of Greenland seems to be constructed of crystalline schists and gneisses, of largely undetermined age. Extensive terrestrial or fluvioterrrestrial deposits containing an abundance of plant remains (beech, oak, walnut, poplar, willow, laurel, vine, sequoia, etc.) of both Cretaceous and Tertiary age, occur in the central region of the F and W coasts, indicating vast changes in the past climatic conditions of the land. Here are also found enormous trap-sheets, bearing evidence of vigorous volcanic activity during the same period of geological time. Politically Greenland or that portion which is officially claimed by Denmark is divided into two inspectorates—the Southern Inspectorate, which extends to lat. 37° 20' and the Northern Inspectorate, the northern limit of which has not yet been defined. Among the better known seats of habitation are Upernivik (the most northern settlement of civilization of the globe) Godhavn (on the island of Diöbo generally recognized as the capital of Greenland) Egedesminde Sukkertoppen, Christianshaab, Jakobshavn Umanak (Udshavn, Frederikshavn, Julianehavn, and Ivigtut, the quarries of the last-named, near the S extremity of the land furnishing nearly all the supplies of commerce. The accumulated population of Greenland does not exceed 12,000, mostly civilized Eskimos, the European number less than 300. The trade of Greenland is a state monopoly directed by the Royal Danish Greenland Company. The principal exports are whale and seal-off for seal and other skins, elderdown, and cryolite. There are extensive fisheries of cod and haddock on the W coast. The Norwegians, Erik the Red, and his followers were the first Europeans to set foot in Greenland, about 982, and soon after a little colony was established there. Davis rediscovered Greenland in 1485-87 but the old Norse colonists had disappeared and only a few traces of their towns remain. The Danes obtained a footing on the W coast in 1721 and shortly afterwards a number of mission stations were established. The more recent exploration of Greenland is associated with the expeditions of Nordenskjöld, Koldewey, Greeley, Knudsen, Nathorst, Ryder and Peary, the last named determining the insularity of the region (1892-1902).

Guatemala, gwá-to-mah lá (Sp. pron. gwá-tá-má lá), a republic of Central America, having Mexico on the N and W the Pacific Ocean on the E and British Honduras the Bay of Honduras, and the republics of Honduras and Salvador on the E. Lat 16° 45' to 17° 50' N lon 88° 15' to 92° 12' W. Area, about 48,290 sq m. Guatemala is, in general, exceedingly picturesque and beautiful and like the other states of Central America, it is distinguished by a luxuriant and varied vegetation. Except in the marshy forests near the NE coast, the country is wholly mountainous. The main chain or cordillera traversing it from SE to NW at no great distance from the Pacific Ocean, sending off numerous branches towards the Atlantic Ocean and forming a great plateau in the interior. This chain attains an elevation in the Sierra Coticac of upward of 11 500 feet. Along the southern slope of the main cordillera are a considerable number of volcanoes, several of which (Fuego, Pacaya, Santa María) are active. The most prominent summits are Tajumulco (12 800 ft.), Tacaná (13 300 ft.), Fuego (12 500 ft.) Agua Santa María and Atitlán. The latest eruption of the new cone of Santa María, in Oct. 1902, proved very destructive. Earthquakes have been at various times of a violent character and are of frequent occurrence. The one of April 1912, which wrecked a large part of the town of Quetzaltenango was of unusual severity. The state is watered by numerous streams, of which the Usulután, flowing NW and forming part of the Mexican boundary and the Motagua and the Poloché continued by the Dulon, both flowing NE to the Bay of Honduras, and their tributaries are the largest but besides these there are many streams of comparatively short courses falling into the Pacific Ocean. There are, likewise, several lakes, the most important being Dulce, Amatitlán, Atitlán and Ixcán the last named about 30 miles long by 9 miles broad near the frontier of Yucatan. On the table land the climate is mild and agreeable, but in more elevated situations the cold at times is considerable. The soil generally is of great fertility producing maize and wheat of superior quality excellent rice and vegetables and tropical fruits in great variety. The most important cultivated products are coffee, sugar tobacco, cacao, bananas, and indigo. Much rubber is also obtained. The value of the coffee exported in 1902 was $7 740 000 the greater part of the product going to Germany.

In the altos or high parts of the state sheep are raised the wool of which is manufactured by the natives into a coarse twilled fabric called güya which again is made into various articles of clothing including long plaids called ponchos. The precious metals have thus far been found only in minor quantity the mere remunerative gold workings being along the Motagua River. The total mileage of railways in operation is about 400. The chief executive of Guatemala is a president, who is elected for a term of six years. Capital, Guatemala, or New Guatemala (Guatemala la Nueva). Pop in 1900 1 647 306 of whom about 60 per cent. were pure Indians. The principal ports are Puerto Barrios and Livingston on the Atlantic Ocean, and San José Ocos, and Champurion on the Pacific Ocean.

Guiana, Guyana, gho-á-ah, or Guyana, gwi-á-ah, a region of South America, in its narrowest sense the territory of British, Dutch and French Guiana (each described under its individual head), but in a wider sense including also a large section of Venezuela and that part of Brazil which lies N of the Amazon and the Rio Negro. It has as a nucleus the Sierra Parima, a system of mountains of low elevation and known to contain deposits of gold. Guiana has a humid climate and a fertile soil, but much of the interior, which as a vast forest-land, remains almost unexplored.

Guiana (gho-á-ah) British, a territory on the N coast of South America, belonging to Great Britain, and considered to extend from the mouth of the Orinoco, 5° 45' N lat., as far northward as lat. 6° 50' N and from lon. 54° 30' to 61° 50' W (which includes some of the territory claimed by Venezuela and involved in the discussion of the Schomburgk Line). It has on the E. Dutch Guiana, on the S. Brazil, and on the W. Venezuela. Area, 104,000 sq m. The surface of the country near the ocean is a rich alluvial flat, extending in mud banks into the sea and inland from 15 to 40 miles, then ascending by successive terraces to the Sierras Pacaraima and Acaari, on the SW and W frontiers while on the W boundary Roraima rises to an elevation of about 8000 feet. The principal rivers are the Cuyuni, Mazaruni, Essequibo, Demerara, Berbice and Corentyn the last forming the E. border. On the low grounds the climate is unhealthy. Dense forests clothe the interior. There are two rainy seasons on the coast, —one from December to February (heavier rains commencing until May) and another from May till the end of July. In the interior there is only one rainy season —from April till the middle of August. The temperature ranges from 75° to 90° mean temperature of the year 81°. The vegetation is luxuriant. Rice, sugar-cane, maize, wheat, cacao, vanilla, tobacco, and sisal are raised. The exports consist chiefly of sugar rum molasses, balsam, timber shingles, gold and diamonds. Gold mining was actively begun in 1886 since which time the product has amounted to several millions of pounds sterling. In 1900-01 the yield of the precious metal was 108,523 ounces in 1902-03, 104,525 ounces. Diamonds valued at $12,876 were exported in the year 1900-01. In 1902-03 the product was valued at £20,380. The government is vested in a governor an executive council, a legislative body called the Court of Policy and the Combined Court (made up of the Court of Policy and a number of financial representatives elected by the people). The colony is divided into the societies of Demerara, Berbice, and Essequibo. There are about 100 miles of operating railway. Chief towns, Georgetown (the capital) and New Amsterdam. Pop. in 1881 252,186 in 1891 294,887 in 1900 394,943 of whom 108,500 were East Indians (chiefly coolies) 99,700 negroes and 2800 Europeans. This region was wrested by the British from the Dutch at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

Guiana (gho-á-ah) Dutch, also known as Surinam, a Dutch colony, having British Guiana on the W. French Guiana on the E. and separated from Brazil on the S by the Acarai range (or more specifically the Tumaco-Mimao mountains) lying between lat. 5° and 6° N and lon. 64° and 57° 40' W. The boundaries on the W and E are formed by the Corentyn and Marowijne rivers, respectively. Area, about 48,000 sq m. Its physical character, climate, and productions are very nearly the same as those of British Guiana. A range of mangrove-covered swamps, mud banks, and sand hills extends along the coast, immediately behind which woody acacia and along the banks of the Surinam lie the plantations. Nine-tenths of the interior is unsettled consisting of moist plains and dense forests intersected by branching rivers. The hilly districts in the interior are still largely unoccupied. The capital Paramaribo stands on the Surinam 10 miles from its mouth. The laws, language, coinage, weights, and measures are all Dutch. The colony is divided into 16 districts and numerous communes and the superior executive authority is vested in a council consisting of a governor a vice-president, and three other members, all nominated by the Dutch sovereign. All religious persuasions are tolerated. The chief productions of the country are sugar, cacao, bananas, coffee, rice and maize. Rum and molasses are extensively manufactured. There are considerable gold washings, and lately crushing plants have been introduced. Pop. in 1901, 76,607 exclusive of the negroes inhabiting the forests.

Guiana (gho-á-ah) French (Fr. Guyane Française, gho-á-ah frân-sé) a French colony in South America, the easternmost division of Guiana, its coast-line extending from the river Marowijne (or Marowijne) on the W. to the river Oyapok on the E., which separates it from Brazil, between lat. 2° and 5° 45' N and lon. 51° 30' and 60° 10' W. Area, 30,450 sq m. This territory much resembles the other Guianas in its physical features and climate. The articles of export are gold, coffee, cacao, sugar rum, cabinet-woods, senotto skins, india-rubber, vanilla, pepper, cloves, cinnamon, phosphates, etc. The coast is low consisting of a flat alluvial tract, of great fertility, in some places marshy and covered with thick forests of mangroves. The highlands in the interior the soil consisting of clay mixed with gold-bearing granitic sand, are also fertile and the whole country is exceedingly well watered, the principal streams being the Mazar, Sinnamari, Cayenne, and Approugon.

The Tumacacum mountains and their continuations form the southern boundary. There is as yet little agriculture in the colony, less than 9000 acres being under cultivation. Rice, maize, coffee, cacao, sugar and indigo are grown in small quantities. Of late nearly every other industry has been superseded by that of gold-washing, an occupation which has proved very profitable. In 1902 the gold export amounted to 140,340 ounces.

The territory includes the island of Cayenne, on which is situated Cayenne the capital of the colony. The government is vested in a governor, assisted by a privy council of 7 members, and a colonial council-general composed of 16 members. The colony is represented in the French parliament by one deputy.

The French first settled in Cayenne in the year 1664. In 1763 the French government, with the view of improving and otherwise increasing the importance of the colony sent out 12,000 emigrants but, on arrangements having been made for their reception or subsequent disposal, they nearly all perished from exposure to the climate. In 1799 the colony was captured by the forces of the British and Portuguese and restored to France at the peace of Paris in 1814. This colony serves as a place of banishment for criminals and political offenders. The boundary with Brazil, which was for a long time in dispute, was finally settled by the Swiss Court of Arbitration in Dec 1900. Pop in 1901 32,908 of whom 4097 were labor convicts.

Haiti, or Hnyiti, hâ'tee (Fr. Haiti hâ'tee' Sp. Sancto Domingo, sâ'n'to de-moong-go, originally Synotho, sîn-thô yo'le, L. Hesperos (a) a rich and beautiful island the largest in the West Indies except Cuba, from which it is separated by the Windward Passage. The Mona Passage on the E separates it from Porto Rico. The island is nearly 400 miles long and from 60 to 150 miles broad, and comprises two republics Haiti in the W and Santo Domingo in the E. Area, about 29,000 sq m. Area of the republic of Haiti, about 10,750 sq m. Pop. according to an ecclesiastical enumeration in 1901 1,294,000 the great majority being blacks. Area of the republic of Santo Domingo about 18,000 sq m. Pop. estimated at about 600,000. The greater part of the island is ruggedly mountainous, with three or more clearly defined ranges directed WNW-ESE. The axial or Cibao, range attains in the Pico del Yagou an elevation of 9700 feet. The loftiest summit of the land, the Loma Tina, is 800 ft. less WNW of the city of Santo Domingo. The mountains are generally clothed with luxuriant and almost impenetrable forests, and are divided off by deep and long valleys. The principal rivers have their sources in the moist, forested region of the Cibao range and are the Artibonite, flowing W and discharging into the Bay of Gonaves, the Yagou del Norte, flowing NW and discharging into Manzanillo Bay the Juma, flowing E into the Bay of Samaná and the San Juan or Yagou del Sur flowing S into Barahona Bay. Several large lakes occupy the southwestern part of the island, and in their longitudinal disposition define the inner boundary of the long southwestern peninsula which lies south of the Bay of Gonaves. The climate is tropical, and on the plains very unhealthy for Europeans. There are but two seasons the rainy season, May to October or December and the dry season, the spring, April to June, is the finest time of the year. Hur rice and other crops are common, especially in August and September. The soil is highly fertile, and a great part of the island is covered with dense forests of mahogany, iron-wood, logwood, cedar and other valuable timber trees. The principal articles exported are mahogany, logwood, hyacinth, rice, coffee, cotton, tobacco, cacao and sugar. Silver, platinum, tin, manganese, antimony, iron and rock-salt are found in the island, but these minerals are little exploited.

The island was discovered by Columbus, Dec. 6, 1492, and on its coast was planted the first permanent colony established by Europeans in the Western Hemisphere, the town of Santo Domingo being founded in 1494. The Indians were soon exterminated by their greedy task masters, and negro slaves took their place. The island was long an important possession of Spain. In the seventeenth century Frenchmen began to settle on its coast, and in the treaty of Ryswick in 1697 the western part of the island was ceded to France. The French colony grew to be very prosperous but the great mass of the inhabitants were slaves. In 1791 a fierce insurrection of the negroes broke out in the colony which was rent at the same time by war between the whites and mulattoes. The Spaniards and English assailed the power of France. In 1803 the French Convention decreed the emancipation of the slaves. The country was rescued from anarchy and from its foreign invaders by the abilities of the negro leader Toussaint l'Ouverture who was made military commander of the colony. Increased by the annexation of the Spanish portion of the island in 1795 and who ultimately ruled as dictator over the whole island. In 1803 Napoleon made war on Toussaint l'Ouverture who was seized and carried to France. The blacks rose and expelled the French in 1803. After the brief imperial rule of Dessalines (1804-6) there were divisions and wars in the island. In 1844 the Republic of Santo Domingo was constituted. The history of the two states of Haiti and Santo Domingo has been characterized by revolution, usurpation and anarchy. See HAITI, REPUBLIC OF and SANTO DOMINGO.

Haiti, Republic of, a state occupying the western or what is generally known as the French division of the island of Haiti. (See HAITI.) Area about 16,750 sq. m. Pop., according to an ecclesiastical census, in 1901, 1,294,000. It is estimated that about one-tenth of the inhabitants are blacks. The remainder are mainly mulattoes, the pure whites being very few. The industries are mainly agricultural. The most important cultivated product being coffee, of which the crop in 1900 was 73,000,000 pounds. Cacao and cotton are also grown. Other important articles of export are logwood, various hard timbers, goat-skin and wax. The mineral resources are those of the island generally but mining is little prosecuted. Capital, Port-au-Prince. Other important towns are Cape Haytien, Les Cayes, Gonaïves and Fort-de-Paix. The administration of the republic is by a president, elected for 7 years, and two legislative chambers. The present constitution was adopted in 1880. The language of the country is French. The religion of the people is nominally Roman Catholic, but the lower classes are steeped in the superstitions and practices of voodoo.

Hamburg, håm bårn (Ger. pron. håm'bo'rg L. Hambur'gum) a republic and city of the German Empire. The free city of Hamburg is situated on the right bank of the Elbe, about 70 miles from its mouth. Lat. of the observatory 53° 33' N. lon. 9° 55' 20" E. It is the largest of the three Hanseatic towns, the greatest commercial city of the continent of Europe, and after London, Liverpool and New York the greatest seat of maritime trade in the world. It consists of an old and a new town, with St. Pauli and other villages and suburbs, largely enclosed by planted walks on the site of its former fortifications, and intersected by canals and by branches of the Alster river. The river forms a large basin (Anson-Alster) outside of the town and a smaller inner basin (the Binnen-Alster), the latter flanked with palatial hotels and residences and with shaded promenades forming the chief attraction of the city and one of the most beautiful spots in the interior of any city. The port or harbor which sometimes in greater part is free harbor or bonded warehouse district, is one of the most animated of the world, and its quays, which extend to Altona, give accommodation to several hundred sea-going vessels, besides a much larger number of minor craft. Steamers ply to nearly all parts of the globe. Among the more important or striking ecclesiastical, educational, and other edifices and institutions of the city are the churches of St. Peter and St. Michael (the latter with a tower 426 feet in height and accommodating 4000 people) the exchange (with a commercial library of 100 000 volumes) the new town hall (Rathaus) Johanneum (with a college and the city library of 600,000 volumes) Kunstsalles or galleries of paintings, natural history museum, museum of industrial art, and the Weber gallery of paintings. The streets and squares of the city are largely adorned with statues and fountains. Hamburg possesses one of the finest zoological gardens of Europe. In 1842 a great conflagration destroyed St. Nicholas church and a large section of the city.

The chief articles of the commerce of Hamburg are coffee, sugar, spirits, wine and malted liquors, grain, butter, tobacco, leather, smoked fish, hides, and fancy articles. The city has extensive iron and boiler works, ship yards, anchor and iron forges, cotton-mills, printing and dyeing establishments, refineries, breweries, and manufactories of gunpowder, chemicals, locomotives, etc. The city has extensive railway communication with the interior of the country. The state of Hamburg has an area of 157 sq. m. and is composed of the city and the district immediately around it, the districts of Bergedorf, Gensfelde, Marschlande, and Kitzbühler, with Vierlanden, the island of Neuwerk, some islands in the Elbe and some detached portions of territory enclosed by Prussian districts. The Elbe, also, between Hamburg and the sea is entirely under the jurisdiction of the state. The surface is level and is watered by the Elbe, Alster and Bille. The Vierlanden and marsh-lands in the river are very productive, being in great part appropriated to fruit- and market-gardens. The government is vested in a senate of 18 members and a house of burgoes consisting of 160 citizens. Previous to 1800 Hamburg was not included in the German customs union. Part of the port has been reserved as a free port, and the so-called New Harbor at Cuxhaven has also been declared a free port. The population of the city in 1898 was 280 350, in 1900 123 921, and with the surrounding communes about 370 000 and in 1900 60 38. About the beginning of the ninth century Charlemagne built a castle at Hamburg as a defence against the Slavs. The place soon rose to importance. In the middle of the thirteenth century Hamburg united with Lübeck and Bremen in establishing the Hanseatic League. It rose to be a powerful republic with the privileges of a free imperial city. In the formation of the German Confederation in 1815 Hamburg, which for some years had belonged to France, was recognized as a free city. In 1871 it became a member of the new empire.

Hannover (Ger. Hannover) a province of Prussia, bounded N. by the North Sea and by Holstein, the territory of Hamburg and Lauenburg, from all of which it is separated by the Elbe, NE. by Mecklenburg-Schwerin. E. by Prussian Saxony and Brunswick, S. by Prussian Saxony, Hesse-Nassau and Westphalia, and W. by the Netherlands. Its territories almost enclose those of the grand-duchy of Oldenburg and of Bremen and surround part of Brunswick. It is of very irregular shape and is divided into several distinct portions. There is a range of sandy islands lying the coast. Area, 14,669 sq. m.

The surface in the SE. is covered by the Harz Mountains, some of whose summits here attain a height of more than 3900 feet, but the rest of the country belongs to the W. part of the great plain which stretches E. across Prussia and Russia. In Hannover this plain subsides into a monotonous flat, with a gentle slope towards the North Sea. In the E. is the Lüneburg Heath. The province is drained by the Elbe, Weser and Rhine. The Harz Mountains are rich in minerals, which have long been worked. They produce iron, lead, copper and silver. Other important mineral products of Hannover are coal and salt.

In the low alluvial flats the soil is remarkably rich and here are large stretches of meadow and pasture. On more elevated ground the soil to a great extent is so poor as often to be left in a state of nature with its covering of heath or of deep beds of peat. But there are extensive tracts of arable land, amounting to one-third of the whole surface. All kinds of grain are cultivated. Other important crops are rape, flax, hops, tobacco, and potatoes. Live-stock is plentiful. Poultry also particularly geese, are reared in vast numbers, and the rearing of bees is extensively carried on upon the moors. The population of the province in 1900 was 2,590,939. The great majority of the inhabitants are Protestants. The northwestern corner of Hannover is East Frisia, where the Frisian language is still heard. The capital of the province is Hannover. The principal seat of learning is the University of Göttingen.

Ernest Augustus a prince of the ducal house of Brunswick-Lüneburg was raised to the dignity of elector of Hannover in 1698. He was the husband of Sophia, grand daughter of James I. and their son George I. inaugurated the Hanoverian dynasty in England to 1714. In 1814 the Congress of Vienna raised Hannover to the rank of a kingdom. On the accession of Queen Victoria to the crown of England the British has placed the Hanoverian crown on the head of the nearest male heir. Ernest Augustus, duke of Cumberland. He died in 1851 and was succeeded by his son, George V. In 1866 the Hanoverians took the Austrian side in the war with Prussia, in consequence of which the Prussians deposed the king and annexed the country.

HANSE (hansa) Towns, called also the HANSEN (hän sa) and HANSENIC League, a celebrated commercial confederacy which derived its name from the ancient German word Hansa, used in the sense of an association for mutual support. In the Middle Ages, Hamburg, Lübeck, and afterwards Brunswick, Danzig, Cologne, Bremen and a great number of other towns entered into an alliance in order to protect their commerce against the pirates who infested the seas bordering on Germany and to safeguard their interests in general. The number of Hanse towns composing the league fluctuated at one time it amounted to about 85 among which were Bergen, in Norway and such a far interior town as Cracow. Their alliance was coveted and their hostility feared by the greatest powers. Several kings were defeated and one (Magnus of Sweden) was deposed by them. Lübeck was the place of assemblies. The date of the dissolution of the confederacy may be stated as approximately 1630. Hamburg, Lübeck and Bremen have retained the name of Hanseatic cities.

Havre (Fr. Le Havre, Eng. Havre; formerly Le Havre de Grâce, L. Portus Gratiae—i. e., 'haven of grace') a city and seaport of France, in Seine-Inférieure on the N side of the estuary of the Seine, at its entrance into the English Channel, 143 miles WNW of Paris. Lat. $49^{\circ} 29' 16' N$, lon $9^{\circ} 09' E$. It is the seaport of Paris and after Marseilles, the port of greatest importance in France. It is surrounded by ramparts and lofty walls, crowned by a parapet and adorned with finely planted allées. The fortifications are very extensive and complete, rendering the city a fortress of the first class. The harbor has 3 basins, not including the outer port, of which the Basin de l'Est, which gives accommodation to the transatlantic steamers, covers 70 acres. The oldest of the docks, the Basin du Roi, was excavated in 1600. The entrance to the outer-port or outer port, is between two long and substantially constructed jetties one of which, more particularly the Jette du Nord is a favorite promenade. The most remarkable buildings are the church of Notre Dame, the exchange or bourse, arsenal custom house, hôtel de ville (city hall), palace of justice, Musée Bibliothèque, theatre, barracks, and light-house on Cap de la Hève. Elegant villas cover the slopes of Jauguville, which may be considered as a suburb of the town. The principal institutions are a school of navigation, a school of geometry as applied to the arts, public library, lyceum, school of industrial arts, and observatory. The manufactures consist of steam-engines, machine, glass-ware, cotton goods, flax, linen, earthen- and stone-ware, paper, lace, oil, linseed, sugar, cables, and cordage. There are also breweries, numerous brick- and tile-works, and an extensive government tobacco-factory. From the building-yards a great number of sailing-vessels and steamers are fitted out.

Havre imports vast quantities of cotton and cotton goods, coffee, cacao, copper rubber hides, etc. Its exports consist of numerous articles of French manufactures (especially silks, cottons, woollens, and leather) hides, copper coffee, rubber, wine, feathers, liqueurs flour, etc. In its coastwise trade Havre is second among the ports of France only by Marseilles and Bordeaux. Regular lines of steamers communicate with the principal European and foreign ports. Havre was founded by Francis I in the early part of the sixteenth century. Pop. in 1881, 74,338. In 1891, 114,664. In 1901, 129,644.

The city is an important shipping point for coal and lumber and it has canneries flour and other mills, textile- and ramage-works, and manufactures of shoes tin cans, blinds and maw etc. Pop. in 1900, 3423.

Hawaii, hā-wai-ee, or Hawaiian Islands, a possession of the United States in the Pacific Ocean officially known as the Territory of Hawaii. The group was named by Captain Cook. The Sandwich Islands after Lord Sandwich of the British Admiralty. The islands are situated on the route from San Francisco and Vancouver to China and Japan, about 2400 miles from the American coast at San Francisco. Lat. $19^{\circ} 14' N$ to $22^{\circ} 15' N$ lon $154^{\circ} 49' W$ to $160^{\circ} 20' W$. The group consists of 8 inhabited islands and several barren rocks, the names and area of the former being Hawaii (the Owyhee of Captain Cook) 4015 sq m. Maui 728 Oahu 1800 Kauai 544 Molokai 444 Laysan Island 261 Lanai 145 Nihoa 80 and Niihau 7. The total area is thus estimated at from 6900 to 7000 sq m. but some geographers reduce this figure considerably. The islands are of volcanic origin and here are found some of the largest volcanoes (both active and extinct) in the world. Mauna Kea and Mauna Loa, on the island of Hawaii (the latter an active volcano) are respectively 13,685 and 12,675 feet in height. Kilauea, with its vast crater, and lake of lava rises from the eastern slope of Mauna Loa and has an elevation of 4400 ft. It is one of the most active craters of the globe. Other mountains traverse this island giving it a rugged and picturesque appearance, its bold cliffs 1000 to 2000 ft. in height in some places fronting upon the sea. On Maui is the famous crater of Haleakala, 25 to 30 miles in circumference 2000 to 3000 ft. deep and 10,000 ft. above sea-level. Though of volcanic origin the group has minor elements of coral formation ledges of compact limestone are due to upheaval. The rocks consist of basalt, lava coral-rock, and sandstone the minerals include sulphur pyrites, common salt sulphur, hematite quartz etc. The soil is composed of disintegrated lava, corals, and volcanic sand. The forests are extensive and the flora includes the candle-nut tree, a species of pandanus, acacia, palms (including the coco-nut), ferns, parasitic plants, etc. sandal wood was formerly important, but has become exhausted. Native and introduced fruits flourish notably the strawberry and raspberry plantain banana tango guava, Malay-apple, semi wild coffee, etc., but is a most important food-plant. The great bulk of the population is engaged in the sugar industry. The climate is malarious, with fresh and pure breezes, the temperature for the year having a mean of about 72° with maxima and minima of 84° and 55° and 65° and 40° . The annual rainfall varies greatly from less than 35 inches in some years and on certain islands to upward of 200 inches in other years and other islands (Oahu Hawaii). The group is connected by steamships with the United States, British Columbia, New Zealand Australia, China and Japan. Interisland communication is also by steam. There are railroads aggregating about 160 miles. The islands are connected by telegraphic cable with San Francisco and with the Philippines. Telephones have been introduced throughout Oahu, Kauai, and Hawaii, and partly in Maui; Oahu and Hawaii are connected by telegraphic cable, and the telegraph encircles Oahu, Hawaii, and Maui. The native name is limited, with probably no Intelligent mammals larger than rats and bats. Live-stock of all ordinary species thrives. The native population, estimated by Cook at 400,000 in 1778, has rapidly decreased, the census of 1900 showing only 31,019 with 8486 of mixed blood, and that of 1900 29,834, with 7835 part Hawaiians. The Hawaiians are intellectually among the most gifted representatives of the Polynesian race. They profess Christianity. The total population of the island group in 1900 was 154,001 including 61,111 Japanese, 28,533 Caucasians, 25,787 Chinese. The Caucasians consist in great part of Portuguese. The value of the exports in 1900 was sugar, \$23,771,344; rice, \$24,077; coffee \$176,748; bananas and pineapples, \$48,039. The exports of sugar to the United States in the year 1902-03 were valued at \$25,318,684. In early times each island had a king, but under Kamehameha I (died 1819) the islands were formed into one kingdom, — a simple despotism, which continued until 1840 when Kamehameha III granted a constitutional government. In Jan 1893 a revolution occurred. Queen Liliuokalani was deposed, and in 1894 a republic was organized. The islands were formally annexed by the United States in Aug 1898 and constituted the territory of Hawaii in June 1900. Capital Honolulu.

It is picturesquely situated at the foot of the Königstuhl (1850 feet) and of a lower mountain called the Geisberg and is surrounded by wooded hills and vineyards. The old town consists of a long main street into which open many narrow and gloomy thoroughfares. A newer residential quarter has arisen to the W and a villa quarter has sprung up on the right bank of the river. Among the notable structures are several churches, the university buildings, the town hall, and the vast and imposing castle, crowning a height about 300 feet above the town. This splendid residence of the Electors Palatine, one of the most interesting architectural monuments of its kind, portions of which date from the Middle Ages, is in great part a ruin. The most beautiful portions are the Otto-Henrichs-Bau, a superb example of German Renaissance style dating from the middle of the sixteenth century and the Friedrich-Bau erected half a century later. In one of the cellars of the castle is the great Heidelberg tun which holds 800 hogheads. The University of Heidelberg, founded in 1386, is the oldest university in the German Empire and after the universities of Prague and Vienna, the oldest of the German universities. It has a library of 400,000 volumes and many rare manuscripts and is one of the most celebrated schools in Europe. Its students number over 1300. The town is embellished with numerous sculptural monuments. In the sixteenth century Heidelberg was prominent as a seat of Calvinism. In 1622 Tilly took it by storm and gave it up to pillage. In 1688 the French took the town and partially burned it and in 1693 it again fell into their hands and was destroyed. It has belonged to Baden since 1803. Heidelberg has manufactures of beer, cigars, leather, surgical appliances, machinery, etc.

Hesse, hén' (Ger. Hessen, hén'shén) Hesse-Darmstadt or formerly Hesse-Darmstadt, hén' dārm'stāt, a state of Germany consisting of two principal portions separated by a strip of Prussian territory, and of a number of small detached fragments. The northern of the two main portions (the province of Upper Hesse, or Oberhessen) is surrounded by the Prussian provinces of Hesse-Nassau. The southern portion comprising the provinces of Starkenburg and Rhenish Hesse, is bounded by Prussia, Bavaria, and Baden. The capital of the grand-duchy and of the province of Starkenburg is Darmstadt. Gießen and Mainz are the capitals respectively of Upper Hesse and Rhenish Hesse. The area is 2665 sq. m. The pop. in 1890 was 992,883 in 1900 1,119,893.

Upper Hesse is mountainous and hilly containing the Vogelsberg which rises to the Taunus to a height of about 2500 feet and part of the Taunus, nearly 3000 ft. In this division is the extensive undulating tract called the Wetterau. Southern Hesse is in great part mountainous, the Odenwald having an elevation of about 2000 ft. but the western portion of this division and a strip to the north belong respectively to the plains of the Rhine and Main. The greater part of the territory is situated in the basin of the Rhine, the rest on that of the Weser. The Rhine traverses the S. portion. At Mainz it receives the Main which touches the borders of Hesse. Another affluent of the Rhine, the Lahn, flows past Gießen. Another stream in the Fulda, belonging to the Weser system. Most of the territory is arable and the soil is very fertile. The cereals in the order of their sowing are rye barley oats, and wheat. Potatoes are extensively raised and much attention is paid to fruit-raising. The vine is cultivated in all the provinces, but chiefly in Rhenish Hesse. Cattle-rearing is an important branch of rural industry. The chief mineral products are coal, iron and salt. The mineral springs of Nauheim are in Upper Hesse. The chief educational institution is the University of Gießen. Two-thirds of the inhabitants are Protestants and most of the remainder Catholics, the Jews numbering about 25,000. Chief towns Mainz, Darmstadt, Offenbach, Worms, and Gießen. The old landgraviate of Hesse was divided into several parts in 1567 and soon after all of the territories were embraced in the two landgraviates of Hesse-Darmstadt and Hesse-Cassel. The former was erected into a grand-duchy in 1806.

Hesse-Cassel, hén'kās'el or Electoral Hesse (Ger. Kurhessen, kūr'hās'hén), formerly a state of western Germany was incorporated with Prussia in 1866 and now forms part of the province of Hesse-Nassau. These territories were incorporated with Prussia in 1866. It is bounded on the N by Westphalia and Hanover, E. by Prussian Saxony, Saxe-Weimar Eisenach, and Bavaria, S. by the south part of the grand-duchy of Hesse, W by Rhenish Prussia, Westphalia, and Waldeck. There is a small detached territory to the E. of Bonn-Weimer-Bismarck, containing Schmalkeiden, and there are some other detached fragments. Area, 4900 sq. mi. Pop. in 1890, 1,654,000; in 1900, 1,900,000. It is divided into the districts of Cassel and Wiesbaden, the latter corresponding to the former duchy of Nassau. Surfaces elevated and mountainous. The mountains include the Westerwald in the extreme W. the Taunus in the SW. the Thuringian Forest in the extreme E. (attaining a height of about 3000 feet) and the Meassner. The chief rivers are the Weser with its two upper branches, the Wehra and Fulda; the Rhine, which forms the SW. boundary, and the Main and Lahn, affluents of the Rhine. The soil is generally fertile. Chief crops are cereals, potatoes, flax, hemp, and tobacco. Fruit abundant and excellent. The vine is cultivated in the S. and W. of the province. Excellent wine is produced in the district called the Rheingau and in the vineyards of Stenberg, Bilsbunn, Hochheim, and Johannisberg. Among the minerals are iron, coal, zinc, copper, lead, and manganese. The province has numerous mineral springs, among the best-known being those of Wiesbaden, Homburg, Schwalbach, Ems, Selters, Schlangenberg, and Neundorf. At the head of the educational institutions is the University of Marburg. The capital is Cassel, the largest city. Frankfurt.

Himalaya (him-a-lay or him-a-lay) or Himachal (him-achal) Mountains (i.e. the abode of snow or ice) a chain or system of mountains, the most ex-valued on the globe, extending in an irregular curve, with a general direction WNW and SSE, through 26° of longitude, nearly 1500 miles, with a breadth of from 100 to 150 miles, along the N. boundary of India, separating it from Tibet, and traversing Kashmir. The Himalayas are the southeastern-most of the mountain ranges which radiate from the Pamir plateau. They are situated between lat. 27° and 35° N. and between lon. 73° and 95° E. and extend from a point a short distance beyond the river Indus on the W to the region of the great bend of the river Brahmaputra on the E., or, roughly, from the mountain confines of Afghanistan to Upper Burma. The Himalayas are not a single mountain-chain, but a range of rugged snowy peaks depending from or forming a scarp to the high table-land of Tibet, and separated by deep gorges the outlets of rapid streams generated by the melted snow and ice of the interior. The mountains rise on the S. from the plains of the Ganges and Brahmaputra in a wall-like range from 4000 to 5000 feet high, broken up at intervals by deep precipitous chasms, through which the springs and rivers flow down with great impetuosity. Between these and the higher ranges lie the fertile and well-cultivated valleys of Nepal and Bhutan. A striking feature of the outer region is the low-lying and marshy but luxuriantly overgrown depression known as the Tera or Tarai, which borders the British and Nepalese frontiers for a length of about 500 miles. The mean elevation of the range has been estimated at from 10,000 to 18,000 ft. but 40 or more of its peaks are known to exceed 24,000 ft. Mount Everest (or the peak that was until recently 1994 identified with a somewhat minor summit, the Ganeshankar) rises to 29,002 ft. and is, so far as is known the culminant point of the globe. Other lofty summits are Nanga Parbat, in the extreme NW (28,629 ft.), Dhaulagiri (28,525 ft.), and Kanchenjunga (28,156 ft.) in the central section and Shemalari or Chamalari (23,033 ft.), in the eastern section. In an inner Trans-Himalayan range, known as the Mutagh (or Karakorum) and which is frequently reckoned to the Himalayas, is Dapesang or Mount Godwin Austen (Peak A, 28,275 ft.) together with the less-known Mutagh Tower, Masherbrum, Gasherbrum, etc. The high table-land of Tibet forming the N. extension of the range, has a more gradual and extensive slope than the steep and abrupt mountain-fronts of the S. There are numerous passes in the Himalayas the greater number of which lie above 17,000 ft. Among the better known are the Yin-Ganoin (the loftiest, 20,450 ft. NW of the great Vanda-Deri) and the Mana-Uhet, between Ghar Khorum and Gurbawal; the Parang La, in Spiti; the Chang La and Taklung La, in Ladakh and the Bara-Lacha, the lowest 10,000 ft. The lofty Mutagh Pass upward of 10,000 ft. elevation, traverses the main Karakorum range. (See KARAKORUM.) The nominal snow line is found on the S. or Indian face of the Himalayas at an average elevation of about 18,300 ft. and on the Tibetan side at 17,500 ft. Giant glaciers, some of which descend to the exceedingly low level of 11,000 (and even 10,300) ft., are found in vastness or most parts of the system, the most extensive being those of the Karakorum branch (Hilpar Bictoro, Blaf Chogo Lungma), and after these, perhaps, the glaciers of the Everest-Kanchenjunga region. The longest of the Kun chingjung glaciers appears to be the Zemo 18 miles long. There are practically no lakes in the true Himalayan region and the chain differing from the long American cordilleras, is destitute of volcanoes. The vegetation of the Himalayas is an extremely varied one, and on the deeper southern slopes is of extraordinary luxuriance, the syzygium woods of Sikkim and the still lower region having long been famous. A flora with marked tropical elements is found to an elevation of some 3000 ft. beyond which, and continued to some 7000 ft., follows a belt of oaks, chestnuts, and laurels. This belt is succeeded by the central and southern European forest zone (with pines, cedars—Deodora) to about 12,000 ft. after which follow the areas of gnarled trees and shrubs, and above these the grass-lands. The limit of tree-growth is found on the northern or Tibetan side at about 14,000 ft. in growths of birch, oak and willow but in the central range trees are rarely met with above 11,000-12,000 ft. In a few exceptional spots flowering plants have been noted at 19,000 ft. Orma (wheat, barley) is cultivated on the Tibetan side at 14,000-15,000 ft. The magnificent growths of giant rhododendron constitute some of the most striking objects of the vegetation of the globe. The animal life of the Himalayas is also very varied, embracing a multitude of types ordinarily associated with the true tropics, such as the tiger, leopard, rhinoceros, and monkey and other types of the temperate and even subarctic regions (bear, wolf, deer, big horned sheep, various deer, marmot, etc.). The tiger and leopard both ascend to the snow-line. In the region be-dwelling upon Tibet is the home of the yak. The Himalayas may properly be considered to be the home of the pheasant tribe of birds. The higher summits and nuclear mass of the Himalayas appear to be constructed of granites and gneisses, associated with schists of different kinds but the outer and even lofty flanks carry sedimentary deposits of comparatively recent date, showing in the fossils of marine character that the main mass of the system was upheaved in late-Tertiary times. Marine fossils have been obtained from elevations of 20,000-21,000 feet. The delightful climate of a saddle some in the Himalayas has specially fitted the region for positions of summer station and sanatoria. (See SIMLA and DARJILING.) Among the more noted explorations of the Himalayas are those of Hooker the brothers Schlegelintweit (who in 1858, on the Ibi-Gamli, attained an altitude of 22,250 ft.) Wagh, Godwin-Austen, Graham, Sir William Conway (who, with the Swiss guide Zurbriggen, reached on the Pioneer Peak of the Karakorum range an elevation of about 23,790 ft.) Douglas Freshfield, and Mr. and Mrs. William Hunter Werkman (the former of whom, in 1903, on a summit of the Karakorum facing the great Chogo Lungma Glacier reached a height of 23,394 ft.)

Guatemala, S.W. Salvador and the Bay of Fonseca, and SE Nicaragua. Capital Tegucigalpa. Area, about 46 256 sq. m. with a coast-line of about 360 miles. Estimated population or dwells of uncivilized Indians, in 1900 65,500. The large island of Roatan and its dependencies belong to the state. (See BAY ISLANDS.) The greater part of the surface is mountainous, having numerous more or less parallel ridges with E and W or ESE-WNW trends enclosing intercommunicating plains and elevated plateaus. The ancient volcanic coast-ridge on the N culminates in Congress peak about 6839 feet in height. A younger volcanic series extends in the S, in the Cerro de Soiquie, an altitude of over 9200 feet. Most of the mountains are composed of ancient schists overlaid by newer sedimentary deposits (Tertiary Cretaceous) which are largely metamorphic. There are no active volcanoes on the main land. The principal rivers are the Choluteca Santiago (or Uluá) Motagua (or Agaña) Patuca (Patuca Negro, and Sagura (or Wauke) flowing to the Caribbean Sea, the last forming part of the boundary on the side of Nicaragua and the Choluteca and Goasacón which fall into the Pacific Ocean. Near the sources of the Goasacón and the Humuya there is a low divide in the mountains, permitting of easy inter-oceanic communication. Most of the streams are badly obstructed by rapids and difficult of navigation. The most important is the Santiago. Lake Yucay in the W of the state, 25 miles long by 8 miles broad is the only lake of note. The Bay or Gulf of Fonseca contains numerous islands, one of which (Tigre) is situated Amapala, the only port of Honduras on the Pacific Ocean. The principal ports on the N coast are Omoa, Puerto Caballos (or Puerto Cortés), Coma, and Trujillo. The exports consist chiefly of metals (valued at about $900 000 in 1902) fruits (mainly bananas) horned cattle, coffee ($750 000) hides and skins, timber tobacco, and indigo. Gold is found in the sands of all the streams, and there are copper mines of great richness. Iron ores, platinum, denabur sile and natron exist, but are not extensively worked. Coal has been discovered in several localities. The valuable timbers, chiefly mahogany and rosewood, constituted at one time a very important article of commerce. Other products are fustic, Brazil-wood, annatto copaliba, copal, ipacatanba, rubber the pitch pine and cedar lime, lemon orange and coconut. The chief culture is that of bananas, Sraapavilla and vanilla of the best quality grow on the N.E. coast. The sugar-cane yields two or three crops a year. The coffee is of excellent quality wheat and other cereals flourish in the elevated districts and melons near the coast. Among wild animals are the deer peccary tapir, various monkeys, racoon, opossum ant-eater armadillo, jaguar coeot, tiger-cat, coyote, and puma. The climate is generally healthy in the mountainous interior but fevers prevail over the low coast tracts. There are as yet few good roads in the republic, and transportation is mainly accomplished by mules and ox-carts. A single line of railway 57 miles in length connects Tegucigalpa with La Placencia. Mean temperature of year 79° maximum about 92° minimum 62°. Annual rainfall 47 inches. The government of the republic is vested in a president, elected for four years and assisted by a cabinet of ministers, and in a chamber of deputies. Honduras was from 1823 to 1838 one of the states of the republic of Central America, founded after the overthrow of Spanish dominion and on the dissolution of that confederacy became an independent republic.

Hong Kong (i.e., the fragrant streams) an island belonging to Great Britain of the SE coast of China situated at the mouth of the estuary that leads to Canton from which it is distant (SE) 53 miles. Together with a small tract on the main land on the peninsula of Kow lung it constitutes the crown colony of Kow Kong, having an area of about 30 sq m. Appended to this is an area of nearly 400 sq m. leased from China in 1898 (see below). Lat. of the observatory 22° 18' 12" N lon 114° 10' 23" E. The island is about 10 miles in extreme length from NW to SE and 7 miles in extreme breadth and is separated from the main land by a strait, which at Ly-a-Mun (Carphus) Pass, is less than half a mile wide. The general appearance of the island is unprepossessing, it being composed mostly of lofty barren rocks that rise from the sea to heights of from 1000 to 1825 feet (Victoria Peak or, more properly Mount Tong) and so abruptly as to leave hardly any space to build upon. Some rank vegetation here and there, and a little herbage and brushwood constitute almost its entire flora, which is, however, rich and varied numbering upward of a thousand species of flowering plants and ferns. The fauna, excepting insects is limited. The climate is enervating with the summer temperature rising to 90°-95° and rarely falling below 75°. Victoria, the capital (itself commonly called Hong Kong) is situated on a magnificent bay of the same name, on the N side of the island. It contains the bulk of the population of the colony. The city stretches for 4 miles along the shore portions of it clambering up the steep hillsides while a part consists of boats. It has many stately buildings and all the appurtenances of a well-equipped modern city except in the matter of transportation which is rendered difficult by the precipitous site. Hong Kong is a free port. Its capacious harbor which is strongly fortified, is one of the most animated in the East every day witnessing the arrival of a whole fleet of junk and fishing boats in addition to the steamers which come from all parts of the world. Some of the docks and magazines are on the main-land, and on the S side of the little island, at Aberdeen, there are ship-building yards and graving-docks. Hong Kong is a great centre of the foreign trade of China, and a mart for opium, four mercury ivory, cotton and cotton-goods, hemp, amber oil, petroleum, woollens, silks, salt tea sugar etc. It has manufactures of sugar cotton var millon etc. and various native industries such as ivory carving and metal working, are carried on.

Hong Kong was occupied by the British in 1841 and was ceded to England by the treaty of Nanking in 1842. The government of the colony is vested in a governor aided by a secretary, commandant chief-justice, attorney general, treasurer, harbor master, director of public works, and legislative council. It is the see of an Anglican bishop. For purposes of defense, an area was leased by Great Britain in 1898 including part of the peninsula of Kow lung, Lan-tao Island and two waters of Mire and Deep bays. The population in 1901 including the military and naval establishments was 284,000 of which number 275,000 were Chinese and 6430 European and American foreigners.

Hottentots, an African race, by some ethnologists thought to be the aboriginal occupants of the S and of that continent. Their limits may be said, in general terms to have been the Orange River on the N and NE and the Kei on the E while on the NW they passed the Orange River and advanced N and NE far into the interior through what is now Great Namaqualand into Damara-land. The Hottentots are generally tall and muscular, of a pale olive complexion with projecting cheek bones. They have thick lips a flat nose with wide nostrils, woolly hair and little beard. The women are often elegantly formed in early life, but become repulsively deformed. Both sexes are distinguished by excessive inscurvation of the spine. When the Dutch first settled at the Cape of Good Hope the Hottentots were a numerous nation of pastoral and partially nomadic habits. At the present day this race, in its pure type, is nearly extinct within the wide territory which formerly belonged to it and of the 200,000-300,000 Hottentots, as they are now called, there are few except in the extreme N who understand the true Hottentot language. Of the unmixed pure Hottentots the number is thought not to exceed 13,000. The Koras or Korannas (shoe-wearers) higher up the Orange River still remain a favorable specimen of the pure Hottentot race. The Namas (or Namaquas) dwell towards the mouth of the Orange. The Bushmen are by some regarded as of Hottentot race by others, again they are thought to be the true aboriginal element of South Africa, from which modified by crossings, has developed the Hottentot. The Hottentot language shows in certain directions a marked perfection and is strongly accentuated by the click sounds.

It runs southward, with wide deviations from a direct course, and intersects Warren co. At Luzerne, in the S part of this county it falls 60 feet over a nearly perpendicular ledge of gneiss. Below Sandy Hill it runs southward almost continuously with small deviations from a direct line. It forms the boundary between the cos. of Saratoga, Albany, Greene, Ulster, Orange, and Rockland, N Y, and Bergen and Hudson, N J. on the right, and the cos. of Washington, Benezel Columbia, Dutchess, Putnam, Westchester and New York on the left, and enters New York Bay at the city of New York separating Manhattan Island from New Jersey. It is about 350 miles long. The tide ascends about 150 miles to Troy which is the head of navigation. Magnificent steamboats ply over the entire course, between Troy and New York and the largest ships can ascend to Hudson 11 miles. At Albany and Poughkeepsie railroad bridges have been constructed. The chief cities on the Hudson are New York, Jersey City, Hoboken, Yonkers, Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Kingston, Hudson, Albany, Troy, Cohoes, and Glens Falls. Minor well-known places are Tarrytown, Ossining (Sing Sing), Haverstraw, Peekskill, West Point, and Catskill. The largest affluents are the Mohawk, Walkill, Hoosic, and Sacandaga. The Hudson is perhaps unrivaled among American rivers for picturesque and magnificent scenery. Below Newburgh the river passes through the Highlands of the Hudson, an ancient range of the Appalachian system whose peaks rise abruptly from the shore to the height of 1000-1600 feet. (See HIGHLANDS OF THE HUDSON) Between Rockland and Westchester co. is an expanded part of the river called Tappan Bay which is about 34 miles wide and 13 miles long. Immediately above this is another expansion called Haverstraw Bay. Below Tappan Bay the W bank of the river is a vertical or very steep wall of trap rock 250-500 feet high known as the Palisades. This remarkable bluff extends in a nearly straight line for a distance of about 16 miles. The banks of the Hudson are studded with beautiful villages. The river is a mile or more in width opposite the Palisades and is about a mile wide between New York and Jersey City. In its passage through the Highlands it contracts to about 1000 feet. This river was named in honor of Henry Hudson who explored it in 1609. It was on the Hudson River that steam-navigation was first successfully inaugurated in 1797. It is connected at Troy by means of the Erie Canal with Buffalo on Lake Erie.

Hungary, hang'garé (Hun. Vagyarország mid ván on ság → c. the land of the Magyars. L. Hungaria Ger. Ungarn, óng'garn) a kingdom of central Europe, constituting one of the autonomous halves of the dual Austro-Hungarian monarchy. It is situated between lat. 44° 19' and 46° 34' N. and lon. 14° 25' and 26° 36' E. Capital Budapest. From the fact that the little river Leitha forms a part of its W. limit, it is sometimes called Transleithania, the country beyond the Leitha, the Austrian division of the monarchy being known as Cisleithania, the country on this side of the Leitha. Within these limits are comprised Hungary proper (with Transylvania) the united kingdom of Croatia and Slavonia, and the district of Fiume. Croatia-Slavonia has a diet of its own for legislation in its local affairs and is also represented in the Hungarian diet or parliament. The kingdom of Hungary is bounded on the N. by Galicia and, for a short distance, by Austrian Silesia, on the E. by Bukovina and Rumania, on the S. by Rumania, Serbia, Banata, and Dalmatia (the rivers Danube and Save forming the boundary on the side of Serbia and Bosnia), on the SW. by the Adriatic on the W. by Carinthia, Styria, and Lower Austria, and on the NW. by Moravia. The area of the kingdom is 123,430 sq. m. of Hungary exclusive of Croatia-Slavonia, 109,010 sq. m. The population in 1890 (close of the year) was 15,750,290. In 1890 17,463,701. In 1900 19,254,559. Among the principal towns of Hungary are Budapest, Szegedin, Eszabadka (Maria-Theresopolis), Debreczin, Presburg, Agram (capital of Croatia-Slavonia), Keszthely, Arad, Temesvár, Grosswardein, Klausenburg, Páskirohen (Pász), Munkács, Kaschau, Fiume, Odenburg, and Stuhlweissenburg. Hungary proper (with Transylvania) is divided into 63 counties.

Hungary is bordered for nearly 800 miles by the Carpathian mountains which in a vast curve, starting from the Danube near Presburg, sweep through the N., the E., and the SE. finally bending westward, till they again reach the Danube at Orsova (the Iron Gate) on the frontier of Rumania and Serbia. The southeastern section of this great natural bulwark is frequently known as the Transylvanian Alps, and is continued in the Balkan Peninsula as part of the Balkan system of mountains. The northern and northwestern Carpathians, the central portion of which is known as the Beskids and the Tatra or High Tatra (Ger. Hoke Tatra, Hun. Magye Tatra) give out various ramifications and minor mountain associations, which are known under special names as the Little Carpathians, the mountains of Munkács and of Luptes, the Fátres, and the Hungarian Ore mountains, the last-named being particularly mineralised. Transylvania is in great part enclosed and covered by the ranges and ramifications of the Carpathians. The highest summits of all Hungary are found in the Tatra, with elevations reaching 8700 feet. For the general characteristics of the vast mountain range, its scenery, peaks, passes, etc. see CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS.

A well pronounced although not very lofty series of volcanic heights known as the Tokay mountains and the Hegyalja, and famous for their wine product, occupy the north-central part of the kingdom and have a course directed at right angles to the Carpathians nearest to them. The western part of Hungary S. and W. of the Danube, is broken by spurs of the Noric and Carole Alps and in this section is the forested highland known as the Bakonyer Wald. The lowland tracts of Hungary are comprised almost entirely in what are known as the two Hungarian plains, — the Little Hungarian Plain (or Kis Alföld) which lies chiefly west of the Danube and covers an area of about 4500 sq. m., and the Great Hungarian Plain (the Alföld proper) which lies between the Danube and the Carpathians and covers an area of 25,000–30,000 sq. m. This great plain, a relic of a former oceanic basin and at a still recent geological period made up of a series of large lacustrine areas, appears to the eye as in most part an unending uniformity flat, and monotonous surface, with the horizon relieved here and there by growths of tall shade-trees and the clustered roofs of the village settlements. Although containing much unproductive area, the larger Hungarian plain is in general very fertile and contains vast ploughed fields and pasture grounds filled with herds of horned cattle, horses, sheep, and swine. The large stretches of grazing and farm-land are known as puszta a name prominent in literature in association with the types of peasantry to be met with on the Alföld, especially the Csikós or horseherd, who, however, is no longer the romantic figure that he was before the advent of railways. The southeastern part of the Alföld known as the Banát, is considered one of the most fertile districts of Europe, and is famed for its wheat. The heart of Hungary contains large tracts of sandy downs and dunes and there are large morasses which are the home of myriads of wild-fowl. Most of the central plain is elevated only from 300 to 400 feet above the level of the sea.

The rivers of Hungary belong to the basins of the Danube and its largest affluent the Theiss only one the Poprád breaks northward through the Carpathian barrier and is tributary to the Vistula. The principal river is the Danube (Duna) which enters Hungary on the W. at Presburg flows SE. and S. to Waizen then S. to Vukovar and again generally E. to Orsova, forming in this line stretch the S. boundary. Its principal affluents in Hungary proper are, on the right the Leitha, Rába, Kapos, and Dráva which last forms the S. boundary W. of the Danube on the left the March (on the W. border) Wang (with the Neutra) Gran Thém (which has a long and exceedingly tortuous southerly course) and the Temea. The larger affluents of the Theiss (Tisza) which for 200 miles flows parallel to the Danube, at about 60 miles distance, are the Sajó (which receives the Hernád) on the right and the Szamos, Kőrös, and Maros on the left. The principal lakes are on either side of the Bakonyer Wald and are the Plattensee (or Lake Balaton) the largest lake of southern Europe, which measures about 50 miles in length, and the Vendécker See (Fertő-Tó) impregnated with salt and soda, SEW. of Presburg which has a length of about 20 miles. The largest canal is the Franzens Canal in the S. connecting the Danube and the Tholer and the Béga Canal, in the Banat, which unites the lower Theiss with the Temea. The climate varies exceedingly. In the mountainous districts the winters are rigorous. In the great plain the cold of winter is severe and the heat of summer intense. The annual rainfall in the mountains is 40–60 inches over the great plains 20–35 inches. Droughts are not infrequent. The chief mineral products are gold, silver, copper, antimony, lead, cobalt, mercury, salt (which occurs in vast deposits in the region of the northeastern Carpathians), alum, coal, lignite and petroleum. The Hungarian opals are famous for their beauty. Mineral springs are numerous and many of them (Hunyad, etc.) celebrated for their medicinal qualities. Soda lakes are scattered over both the Hungarian plains and nitre exists in vast quantities. Among the chief watering places are Balatonfüred, on Lake Balaton, Schmecks (or Tatrafüred) in the High Tatra and Hercelesfürdő (Baths of Herceles) near Miskolc. The country produces beautiful crops of grain which is exported in large quantities. The leading cereals are wheat and maize. The Hungarian flour is celebrated for its quality. It was exported in 1902 to the value of about $35,000,000. The exports of wheat in the same year were valued at about half of that amount. The cultivation of the vine is carried to great perfection. Next to France, Hungary produces the greatest quantity of wine of any country in Europe and the quality of several of its varieties, especially that of Tokay is unrivalled. Fruit is raised in great variety and abundance. In addition to its grapes, the country excels in its melons, plums, cherries and apricots. The various kinds of nuts constitute an important product. Tobacco is extensively grown. The mountains are covered with dense forests and woods (evergreens, oaks, beech). The rich pastures of Hungary produce some of the finest cattle in Europe. In some districts buffaloes are extensively used in farm labor. Wild and domestic fowls are abundant and bees are extensively reared. Among the indigenous quadrupeds are the wolf, bear, fox, badger, lynx, wild-cat, roe, red deer, boar, chamois, ibex, etc. Among the characteristic birds of Hungary are the nightingale, sky lark and stork. Fish are plentiful in the rivers and lakes and the Theiss is reckoned the richest in fish of any river in Europe. The chief occupations are agriculture and cattle-rearing. Manufactures are still relatively unimportant, comprising woolens, linens, silks, leather paper tobacco, beer, and iron ware, machinery, coaches, locomotives, and steel rails. The Hungarian mines, many of which have been worked since the Middle Ages, employ a large number of hands. Hundreds of vessels are engaged on the Danube in the transportation of produce and merchandise. The length of railroad lines was in 1901 10,340 miles of telegraph lines 13,770 miles. The economic development of Hungary in the last quarter of a century has proceeded with gigantic strides, and is evidenced by the introduction of all kinds of modern improvements in the cities and their architectural embellishment. Budapest has become one of the finest capitals of Europe.

The sovereign of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy is king of Hungary and governs the kingdom through a Hungarian ministry (See AUSTRIA-HUNGARY). The legislative power is vested in a diet (or parliament) of two houses: the upper house, known as the House of Magnates, and the lower house, or house of representatives. The former consists of princes (archdukes) of the reigning dynasty, hereditary peers, nobles, bishops, bishops, and other ecclesiastical dignitaries (representing the various churches), life peers, various state dignitaries, and delegates from Croatia-Slavonia. The house of representatives consists of 453 members, of whom 40 are delegates from Croatia-Slavonia. The language of the diet which until recently was Latin is Hungarian, with the exception that the representatives of Croatia-Slavonia may speak their own language. The suffrage is limited by a property income qualification.

Hungary is peopled by numerous distinct races, speaking different languages. The dominant race is that of the Magyars (or Hungarians) who belong to the Finnic branch of the Uralo-Altaic family of nations and whose language belongs to the so-called agglutinating type. The Magyar language is spoken by about 9,000,000 people, or nearly one-half of the total population of the Hungarian kingdom, but only about three-fourths of this number are Magyars by blood. The Slavic population of the kingdom numbers between 5,000,000 and 5,500,000. Of these somewhat more than half belong to the southern Slavs (Croats and Serbs) who dwell outside of Hungary proper and the remainder to the northern Slavs (Slovaks and Ruthenians) the former who inhabit the region of the northwestern Carpathians comprising four-fifths of the number. Next to the Magyars and Slavs the most numerous element is that of the Wallachs (Rumanians) who number about 3,000,000 and constitute the bulk of the population of Transylvania. There are about 2,000,000 Germans in Hungary. The number of Jews is not far from 1,000,000. There is a considerable Gypsy population. Somewhat more than one-half of the inhabitants of Hungary are Roman Catholics, about one-fifth are Protestants next in order come the Orthodox Greeks, the members of the United Greek Church and the Jews. Of the Magyars more than one-half are Roman Catholics, the remainder belonging mainly to the Reformed Church. The seat of the Catholic primate of Hungary is Gran. The chief educational institution is the university of Budapest.

The southwestern and southeastern parts of Hungary belonged to the Roman Empire, being included in Pannonia and Dacia. At the time of the great migration of nations various Germanic tribes, and the Huns, Avars, and Slavs, made their way into these regions. The advent of the Magyars took place at the close of the ninth century. They came as a barbarous people, and for more than half a century their incursions made them the terror of Europe. After receiving Christianity at the hands of the Germans (933-955) they began to settle down to a more peaceful existence, embraced Christianity and became civilized. Their energetic ruler Saint Stephen, assumed the title of king in 1000 and added Transylvania to his dominions. Under Matthias Corvinus (1458-90) the most enlightened ruler of the closing period of the Middle Ages, Hungary enjoyed great prosperity but little more than a generation after his death the tide of Turkish invasion partly engulfed the country. From 1526 when Ferdinand I of Hapsburg was elected king by part of the nobles, the history of Hungary has formed part of that of Austria. Turkish domination in Hungary was brought to a close by the wars waged by Austria and her allies between 1683 and 1713. In 1687 the emperor Leopold I forced the Hungarians to declare their crown hereditary in the Austrian dynasty. The Hungarians were successful in maintaining their constitutional liberties against the aggressions of the Hapsburg sovereigns until the revolutionary struggle of 1848-49 after which for a time Hungary was a subject province of Austria. In 1867 Hungary recovered its liberties the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy being reconstituted on a dualistic basis.

Hu'ren, Laka (formerly pronounced hu ron') a body of water of the United States and Canada, the second in size of the five great lakes of North America communicating with the St. Lawrence River lies between 43° and 46° 18' N lat. and between 80° and 84° 40' W lon. being bounded on the SW by the state of Michigan and in other directions by the Canadian provinces of Ontario. It receives its main supplies from lakes Michigan and Superior by the Straits of Mackinaw and St. Mary's River and its outlet is the St.

Olsh River It is divided into two unequal portions by a long peninsula named Bruce Promontory (terminating in Cabot's Head) and the Manitowish chain of islands. The parts to the N and E are called Manitowish (i. e., the Great Spirit) Bay or the North Channel, and Georgian Bay. With the exception of these bodies of water and Saginaw Bay the outline of Lake Huron approaches in form very nearly to a crescent. Its position lengthwise is about SSE and VNW, and the distance from one extremity to the other following the curve, does not vary much from 230 miles. The greatest breadth exclusive of Georgian Bay is 195 miles average breadth 10 miles. Area, 23 000 sq m. The surface of the water is elevated 8 feet above Lake Erie, 334 ft. above Lake Ontario and 581 ft. above the level of the sea. The depth of Lake Huron is seemingly greater than that of any other in the chain averaging probably not less than 700 ft. and increasing in a few places to 1500 or even 1700 ft. The waters are remarkably clear especially towards the Straits of Mackinaw and very pure and sweet. This lake is said to contain upward of 3000 islands. It is the reservoir of numerous streams and its coast affords some fine harbors. Like most of the other lakes in the chain it is subject to fearful storms but its navigation is not generally dangerous. The most important ports are Bay City at the head of Saginaw Bay, in Michigan, and Goderich Owen Sound and Collingwood in Ontario, the last two being on Georgian Bay. The outlet is between Port Huron and Sarnia.

Iceland (called Island semikind by the natives. Land Island d'ea) an island subject to the crown of Denmark and situated between the North Atlantic and the Arctic oceans 155 miles SE of the nearest point of Greenland and 670 miles from the coast of Norway extending between lat 63° 24' and 66° 33' N and lon 15° 31' and 24° 30' W. Greatest length, from N to W 290 miles. Area, about 60,450 sq m. The coast-line for a considerable extent on the SE is almost unbroken but in all other directions it presents a continued succession of deep bays, fjords, and jutting promontories. The water along the coast is generally deep, and the bays furnish a great number of harbors, with good anchorage and complete shelter. The interior of the island has for the most part a very wild and desolate appearance, being chiefly a volcanic highland, with an average elevation of about 2000 feet. Many of the higher summits are crowned with perpetual snow and ice which, stretching down their sides into the intervening valleys form immense glaciers. The snow line varies in position between about 1300 ft in the NW and 3500-4000 ft in the centre. The low mountains, which take the common designation of Jökull have their culminating point in Örni Jökull near the SE coast, with an altitude of 8241 (8425) ft. The Snæfjall near the W coast, is 4710 ft. Hence the noted volcano, is 5110 ft. in elevation (See Hæcla.) Skaptar Jökull, the eruption of which, in 1783 was one of the most violent in the records of volcanic outbreaks, occupies an immense tract in the SE part of the island. The glaciers cover a surface of about 4000-5000 sq m. They exist on all the mountains above 4000 ft in elevation and extend down to the sea. The greatest mass of ice, known as the Vatnajökull is in the SE. of the island in this region has for centuries been the scene of the most violent volcanic eruptions. There are 100 or more volcanoes in Iceland several of which have been active within a century. The island also contains numerous small and volcanoes and intermittent thermal springs or geysers the best known of which is the Geysir (or Great Geyser) which has given the name to the general phenomena represented by these waters. The Strokkur which was initiated by an eruption in the early part of the eighteenth century ceased its activity in 1896. The immense reservoirs of snow and ice furnish inexhaustible supplies to numerous lakes and rivers, but the latter owing to the rugged nature of the surface, are more remarkable for their number than for their length. The most noted are the Hvítá (or White River) the Þjórfar and the Jökull the first two being each about 180 miles in length. The most valuable mineral product is sulphur, surturbrá or lignite, is also found. The other minerals descending of nature are chalcodony, nickel crystal and the well-known double refracting spar for which the island has long been famous. On many parts of the coast, particularly the W., basaltic caves occur. That of Stappan is not unworthy to be compared with Fingal's Cave.

The climate is variable. The temperature is more elevated than that of any other country in the same latitude mean of year at Reykjavik 40° Fahr. of the summer 51° and of the winter 29°. The S. coasts washed by the Gulf Stream drift, are much milder than the N. and generally free from ice. Forests formerly abounded but the island is now almost destitute of trees. Clumps of small woods of stunted birch and mountain ash occur. The want of fuel is severely felt, although the Gulf Stream and the polar currents occasionally deposit driftwood in these shores and a fine white turf is used. Except a few oats and a kind of wild grass whose seeds are carefully gathered for food no grain can be raised but potatoes and garden-vegetables are cultivated. There are few natural pastures and rich grass-fields surround the farms. The most important domestic animal is the sheep which with the goat, cow, horse, ox, and dog was introduced from Norway. Reindeer introduced in 1770 now exist in large herds but are not domesticated. The polar bear is sometimes seen on the shores from the northern ice-fields. The fox is one of the commonest of the land animals. Flea (cod herring flounder) are very abundant on all the coasts and form an important part of the support of the inhabitants. Birds are very numerous the most valuable of which is the elder duck. No reptiles of any kind exist in the island. There are practically no manufactures and most of the inhabitants live by breeding cattle and sheep. Until recently there were no roads in the island and transport was effected almost exclusively over bridle-paths by horses. Good roads are now being constructed, together with bridges over the numerous streams.

The inhabitants belong to the Scandinavian race. Their language is peculiar to the island, it is more nearly allied to the old Norse than any other now spoken. They are strongly attached to their country and hospitable to strangers. Domestic education is universal and the intellectual capacity of the people is of a superior order. A university has recently been established in the capital city where there are also a theological school (since 1847) medical school (since 1876, with a four years course) and a general library containing besides other works, a complete collection of works in Icelandic literature. Iceland possesses a rich literature. Parts of the Edda appear to have been composed soon after the colonisation of the island. Many of the most valuable works of European literature have been translated into the native tongue. Almost all the inhabitants are Lutherans, the whole island forming a single bishopric. In 1874 the 1000th anniversary of Iceland's history was celebrated at Reykjavik, the capital on which occasion the island received its autonomy but it still remains subject to the king of Denmark who appoints its governor. It has its own legislature (Althing) and all its citizens are equal before the law. The trade of Iceland is chiefly restricted to Danub and Icelandic vessels, but the ports are open to commerce. The chief exports are fish, cod-liver oil, sheep and horses, mutton, wool and eider-down.

Iceland was discovered by the Norwegians about 880 and permanently settled in 874 but is believed to have been known to the Irish Seafarers and temporarily colonized by them before this period. The Norse settlement continued to increase rapidly by the arrival of new settlers, and early in the tenth century the inhabitants formed themselves into a republic, which existed for about 350 years. In the latter part of the thirteenth century Iceland became subject to Norway, and through it, in 1380 to Denmark, with which it still remains. Pop. in 1703, 50,444 in 1845, 67,180 in 1890 72,443 in 1900 74,927 in 1901 78,489.

Idaho, i-da-bo, one of the northwestern states of the American Union situated in the Pacific highland and principally in the basin of the Columbia River is bounded N by British Columbia and Montana, E by Montana and Wyoming, S by Utah and Nevada, and W by Oregon and Washington. It lies between lat. 42° and 49° N and lon.

111° and 117° W. The crest of the Bitter Root Mountains forms the boundary on the NE. The W boundary follows for about 180 miles the course of the Snake (Shoshone or Lewis) River. Area, 84,200 sq. m.

Surface.—The face of the country is principally mountainous, but there are several large prairie tracts. In the N lateral spurs (the Kootenai, Clear d'Alene and Lapwai Mountains and others) extend westward from the Bitter Root range. Idaho is roughly divided by the Salmon River Mountains, whose snow-clad peaks exceed in some cases an altitude of 12,000 feet, into two portions sometimes known as Northern and Southern Idaho. In the S and SE respectively are the Goose Creek and Bear River Mountains, which form part of the watershed dividing the Snake River valley from the Great Salt Lake basin in which the N part of the state lies. Northward of these ranges and of the Snake River but SE of the Salmon River Mountains is the fertile Camas Prairie and there are elsewhere great sage-plains and rocky desert. Great desert plains, or fields of basalt cover a large part of the state S of the Bitter Root and Salmon River Mountains, extending to the Snake River and occupying most of the region between the E and W boundaries. These great Snake River Plains are largely covered with drifting sands which support a growth of arborescent artemisia. Towards the middle of this remarkable desert are the detached mountain prominences known as the Three Buttes, which have long served as landmarks to the traveler. The chief rivers of the state are the Snake (a tributary of the Columbia) and its main branch the Salmon. Remarkable points of interest are the Great Shoshone, American and Salmon Falls, all cataracts of the Snake River. The first is, at high water a rival of Niagara in magnificence and the fall or perpendicular descent exceeds that of Niagara. (See Snake River and Snake Falls.) The great canyon of the Shoshone, where the river flows for many miles at the bottom of a vast trough or chasm in the rocks, is another noteworthy feature. There are many lakes and rivers with fertile valleys, and picturesque waterfalls abound in the mountains. Evergreen (coniferous) trees cover some of the hills and mountains with a dense forest. Red cedar especially abounds in the N and pines, fir, spruce etc. are abundant in many districts but hard-wood timber is as a rule, very deficient.

Mineral Resources.—The various geological ages from the Silurian to the Pliocene are poorly all represented in the state, but none of them extensively except the Tertiary and the post-Tertiary when strata and deposits cover large areas. The Asolo rocks are also largely represented. Idaho is one of the most important sources of supply of the precious metals. Gold was discovered on the Fend d'Orville River in 1852. In 1880 placer mining operations were in vogue on the South Fork of the Clearwater and on the forks of the Clear d'Alene River are the famous Clear d'Alene mines rich in gold, silver and lead. Both quartz and placer gold is obtained in nearly all parts of the state, and there has been some dredging in the gold bearing streams. The gold product for the year 1900 was valued at $1,727,800. The yield of silver was 6,500,000 fine ounces with a valuation of $3,988,000. Lead 25,000 short tons. The yield of gold in 1903 was valued at $1,670,400 and of silver $3,514,000. The copper product during the same period (largely increasing) was nearly 800,000 pounds. Coal (strictly a lignite Tertiary or Cretaceous) is found at various points. Salt, sulphur from ore, and building-stones are abundant.

Agriculture et.—Idaho is in general much better adapted for grazing than for agriculture. It has vast wastes covered with bunch-grasses and with winter fat or white sage (Eucalyptus) which is eagerly sought by cattle and upon it they thrive and fatten well in winter. Notwithstanding the elevated character of the state, the winters are not often severe, considering the latitude; and even in the N cattle may range in the valleys without shelter or foddering. The country where not of a desert character is well watered by rivers, and the soil when irrigated is wonderfully productive. Over 8,000,000 acres are reported as capable of successful irrigation and of this number probably over 700,000 acres are now artificially watered. Among the main crops there are sheltered basins or parks with fine soil and excellent pasturage. The principal agricultural crop for the year 1900 were wheat 1,104,629 bushels, oats 1,449,845 bushels, barley 389,012 bushels, potatoes 684,680 bushels and hay 659,103 tons. There were estimated to be in the state in the same year 2,516,340 sheep which gave wool (washed and unwashed) weighing 19,571,800 pounds. The total railroad mileage of the state was in 1900 1332.

Government.—The state constitution was adopted in 1889. The state officers are elected for terms of two years. The legislature holds biennial sessions. Idaho has 1 representative in the lower house of the national congress.

Education.—In 1900 there were 756 school-houses, with an attendance of 35,339 pupils. There were 7 public high-schools 2 public normal-schools (at Albion and Lewiston) and a state university (the University of Idaho located at Moscow) with about 185 students. An agricultural and mechanical college is located at Idaho Falls. There are a number of denominational colleges or academies at Caldwell, Lewiston and Boise. There are Roman Catholic and other mission schools, chiefly among the Indians.

Counties and Towns. Population.—Idaho has 23 counties,—viz. Ada, Alturas, Blaine, Bannock, Bear Lake, Bingham, Blaine, Boise, Canyon, Cassia, Custer, Elmore, Fremont, Idaho, Kootenai, Latah, Lemhi, Lincoln, Logan, Madison, Pondera, Owyhee, Shoshone and Washington. The principal towns are Boise (the capital) with 6951 inhabitants, Pocatello 4446, Moscow, Lewiston, Wallace, Weiser, etc. The total population in 1870 was 20,533 of whom 10,018 were whites. In 1880 the population was 32,610. In 1890 84,336 and in 1900 161,772. The native Indians belong mainly to the Shoshone, Nez Percé, Bannack and Kootenai tribes, the total number located on reservation lands in 1900 having been 4226. There are in Idaho over 15,000 Mormons.

History.—In 1803 the territory of Idaho was formed, being cut off mainly from Washington, Dakota, and Nebraska. It then included Montana and a great part of Wyoming. Idaho received its present limits in 1886, after having parted with a large share of its area in 1864. On July 3, 1890 it was admitted to the Union as a state.

Idaho, a county of Idaho, is bounded on the W by the Snake (or Lewis) River and intersected by the Salmon River. The Lapwai Mountains extend along the N border. The county has gold-mines (quartz and placer). Area, 11,074 sq. mi. Capital, Mount Idaho. Pop. in 1890 2456. In 1900 4121.

Ililman, il'ila-mán or il'ila-ola, a north-central state of the American Union, lying in the valley of the Mississippi River and in that of the Great Lakes, and bounded N by Wisconsin E. by Lake Michigan and Indiana, SE. by Kentucky, SW by Missouri, and W by Minnesota and Iowa.

Lake Michigan washes its northeastern border; the Wabash River separates it in part from Indiana from Kentucky it is divided by the Ohio River and along its whole western limit flows the Mississippi River separating it from Iowa and Missouri. Area, 56,600 sq. m.

Face of the Country—Illinois is generally level, elevated from about 350 to 900 feet above the sea, and gently inclined to the south. Cairo at the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, is at its lowest point, 207 ft. above the Gulf of Mexico. Silver Creek, one of the highest points of the state, is at an altitude of 1145 ft. Along the principal rivers there are some bluffs, in the NW there is a broken tract of uneven country; and in the alluvial districts there are, in some places, deep valleys eroded by the action of streams. In the extreme S there is a marked elevation which crosses the state from Shawneetown to Grand Tower on the Mississippi, reaching a height of 860 ft. or more above sea-level. Another height of land runs from NNW to SSE, across the state, crossing the Rock River at Grand Detour and the Illinois at Split Rock. The prairie-country is in part very level but more generally gently undulating. It is not very many years since this region was almost destitute of trees but the area of woodland, which is most developed in the S, has extended somewhat as the result of tree-planting. As a rule, the natural forests include but few coniferous trees.

Rivers and Lakes—The Mississippi, Ohio and Wabash rivers afford important means of steam-communication. The principal river of the state is the Illinois, formed by the union of the Des Plaines and the Kankakee, by means of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, uniting with the Chicago River it receives a supply of water from Lake Michigan and affords communication between the Great Lakes and the Mississippi. Its main tributaries have also been fitted to some extent, for navigation. The rivers Sangamon, Kankakee, Fevre, Spoon, Rock, Embarras, and others have a limited extent of navigation. Peoria Lake is a beautiful expansion of the Illinois. In the NE are several shallow lakes in a marshy region considerably resorted to by sportsmen and fowling.

Climate—The climate is quite varied for the state extends N and S through five and a half degrees of latitude (from 37° in 43° 30' N) the northern limit having the latitude of Salem Mass and the southern extremity being farther S than Petersburg Va. The mean annual temperature is, therefore, about 11° Fahr higher in the S than in the N, while the variation is greater in the N. The summers and winters are both apt to be severe, and the extremes of temperature (normal) are about 104° and -10° to -15°. The average rainfall over most of the region is about 38 inches. In the S especially on the Mississippi bottom lands, paludal fivers are apt to prevail during certain seasons of the year.

Mineral Resources—Of the total area of Illinois, about two-thirds belongs to the productive coal-field, but nearly all the state is deeply overlaid by the drift. The extreme S of the state is Tertiary and Post-Tertiary but the greater portion of the area is of Paleozoic age (Silurian-Carboniferous). The coals of Illinois are widely distributed, abundant, and easily accessible; all are bituminous. In 1906 Illinois stood second among the states of the Union in the mining of coal with a production of 24,439,919 short tons. In 1900 there were in operation 920 mines and in 1905 the coal product amounted to 36,567,104 short tons. The iron-ores of the state are mostly of inferior quality but are improved by admixture with ores from other states. The production of pig iron in 1903 aggregated 1,692,375 long tons, of Bessemer steel, 1,366,603 tons, and of open hearth steel, 423,919 tons. Galena-ores are found chiefly in the NW where they are largely associated with alum, the annual product being about 30,000 tons. Copper-ores, gypsum, and marble are found at various points. Saline, sulphur and chalybeate springs occur mainly southward.

Agricultural Resources, etc.—Few states of the Union exceed Illinois in agricultural capabilities. In 1900 81 per cent. of the land area was in farms, of which upward of 84 per cent was improved. Spring and winter wheat, corn and other cereals, live-stock hay, and dairy products are the principal articles of export. The production of the principal crops was, in 1900: corn, 264,175,326 bushels; wheat, 17,982,068 bushels; oats, 133,042,984 bushels; barley, 363,144 bushels; rye, 1,270,684 bushels; potatoes, 16,390,104 bushels and hay, 2,119,419 tons.

Fruit-culture is carried on in nearly every part of the state but the hilly belt of the extreme S. is regarded as the best section for this industry. Here the production of apples, peaches, pears, and the small fruits is the leading pursuit. In the southernmost counties cotton has been successfully grown. Stock-raising is a most important pursuit in the state, which in the number of horses (over 1,000,000) bullock-oxen (1,000,000), and hogs (upward of 5,000,000) stands nearly first among the states of the Union. The value of the dairy products was, in 1899 $23,640,900.

Manufactures—Illinois stands next to New York and Pennsylvania as the third manufacturing state of the Union. The leading manufactures are those of iron, steel, steel rails, machinery castings, pig lead and zinc, flour, cement, lime, brick, drain-tile, boots shoes, clothing hardware, glass-ware watches, wooden-ware, cooperage, lumber, furniture, farming-implements, bridge-work of wood and iron, carriages and railroad-cars, electrical appliances, bicycles, automobiles, leather, saddlery, tobacco, lard, lard oil, soap, whiskey malt and malt liquors, woollens, hosiery and the coarse and simpler kinds of manufactured goods, which are largely produced in nearly all parts of the state. Chicago, Peoria, Aurora, Elgin, Joliet, Jacksonville, Rockford, Dixon, Bloomington, and many other towns have large manufacturing interests. The value of the manufactures of iron and steel was, in 1899 $30,144,681 of liquors, $57,941,997; agricultural implements, $42,033,796 and men's clothing $37,378,717. Peoria is the centre of the liquor industry and stands first among the cities of the Union in the production of whiskeys and high-wines. The most important industry of the state is that of slaughtering and meat-packing, the centre of which is Chicago, and of which the product in 1900 was valued at $287,922,377.

Fisheries—The fisheries of the state centre chiefly at Chicago. Lake Michigan produces wall-eyed pike, several kinds of bass, pike, salmon trout, white-fish, sucker, carp, sauger, lake-herring (a white-fish), sturgeon etc. The Mississippi and its tributaries yield wall-eyed pike, pike-perch, buffalo-fish, sturgeon, paddle-fish, and other species, many of them utilized as food-fishes.

Railroads—Trunk lines connect all the important towns with one another and with the rivers in the adjacent states, extending in every direction, while of the minor or subsidiary roads and branches there are a great number. In 1846 there were 22 miles of railroad in the state. In 1850 111 in 1855 587, in 1860 2790, in 1870 6223 in 1880 7681 in 1890 10,150 in 1900 10,909. The first railroad in the state was the Sangamon and Morgan a part of which was opened in 1839. At present the railroad service is so effective and so cheap that the transportation of freight upon the rivers Ohio and Mississippi formerly very extensive, is greatly reduced. The lake-commerce centring chiefly at Chicago extends on the Canadian canals and the river St. Lawrence, to the Atlantic ports and to Europe (direct).

Education—The leading educational institution of the state is the University of Chicago, which was opened in 1892 and which is attended by upward of 3000 students. The State University (University of Illinois) is situated at Urbana and Champaign and the Northwestern University at Chicago. Among the minor collegiate and technical institutions are the Armour Institute of Technology and Rush Medical College at Chicago, Knox College at Galesburg, and the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington. There are normal schools at Carbondale, Charleston, Chicago, Dekalb, Dixon, Macomb and Normal. There are institutions for the blind and for deaf-mutes at Jacksonville. Insane hospitals at Jacksonville, Elgin, Chicago, Anna, Peoria, and Watertown. Reform schools at Pontiac and Chicago. A state institution for feeble-minded youth at Lincoln. An asylum for insane criminals at Chester. A soldiers' orphan's home at Normal; a soldiers' widows' home at Wilmington, and at Joliet is the state penitentiary where the convicts are instructed and made to earn enough to pay the expenses of the institution.

Counties—Illinois had in 1900 102 counties, as follows: Adams, Alexander, Bond, Boone, Brown, Bureau, Calhoun, Carroll, Cass, Champaign, Christian, Clark, Clay, Clinton, Cole, Cook, Crawford, Cumberland, Dekalb, Dewitt, Douglas, DuPage, Edgar, Edwards, Effingham, Fayette, Ford, Franklin, Fulton, Gallatin, Greene, Grundy, Hamilton, Hancock, Hardin, Henderson, Henry, Iroquois, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Jersey, Jo Daviess, Johnson, Kane, Kankakee, Kendall, Knox, Lake, LaSalle, Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Logan, Mason, Macoupin, Madison, Marion, Marshall, Mason, Mazon, McDonough, McHenry, McLean, Menard, Meroux, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Montrose, Ogle, Peoria, Perry, Pike, Pope, Pope, Putnam, Randolph, Richland, Rock Island, Saline, Sangamon, Schuyler, Scott, Shelby, Stark, St. Clair, Stephenson, Tazewell, Union, Vermilion, Wabash, Warren, Washington, Wayne, White, Whiteside, Will, Williamson, Winnebago, and Woodford.

Cities—The principal cities are Chicago, on Lake Michigan (pop. in 1850 503,185 in 1890 1,099,880 in 1900, 1,598,375); Springfield, the capital (pop. in 1860, 24,150); Peoria, on the Illinois River, 60,100 Quincy 36,543, Rockford, 31,051; Joliet, 29,353; East St. Louis, 28,535; Bloomington, 22,226 Aurora, 24,147 Elgin, 26,754; Decatur 22,452. Other places of importance are Belleville, Galesburg, Rock Island, Jacksonville, Moline, Danville, Streator, Cairo, Alton, Freeport, Ottawa, LaSalle, Kankakee, and Galena.

Constitution.—The present constitution was adopted in 1870. Judges are chosen by the people and hold their office for limited terms. The General Assembly consists of a Senate whose members are elected for 4 years and a House of Representatives, elected for 2 years. There is a system of minority representation in the election of representatives. Most of the state executive officers, including the governor, are chosen for four years. The state sends 23 representatives to the lower house of the Federal Congress.

History.—The name of the state is derived from that of the Illinois confederacy of Indian tribes, chiefly Algonquians, who once inhabited a large part of this state, although the Sauk, Foxes, Iowas etc. lived in the north. In 1673 the French explorer Joliet descended the Mississippi past what is now Illinois, and in 1675 Father Marquette founded a mission among the Kankakee Indians. In 1679 La Salle entered this region from Canada and founded Fort Crèvecoeur on the Illinois River. A few years later French traders made their appearance. Kankakee was the first permanent European settlement in the Mississippi Valley. The French lived at peace with the Indians, but the settlements did not increase greatly in population under their system. In 1783 occurred the cession of Canada to England, and with it the Illinois country was held to have passed under English sway. In 1787 the United States government organized the Northwest Territory and in 1800 the Indiana Territory to each of which in succession Illinois belonged. In 1809 Illinois Territory was set off as extending northward to British America. In 1818 the state was admitted to the Union, with its present limits. A great stream of immigrants poured into the fertile region. The period from 1830 to 1856 witnessed the construction of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal and the rise of Chicago from a small village to a great emporium of commerce. The Mormon troubles occurred in 1840-44. The important landmark of 1856 made by Congress in aid of the Illinois Central Railroad was the means of greatly stimulating the development of the resources of the state. During the Civil War Illinois was the principal granary and feeder of the United States armies. In 1871 occurred the great fire at Chicago. In 1893 the Columbian Exposition was held in that city. Illinois has given two presidents to the United States, Lincoln and Grant.

Population.—The population in 1800 was 2458. In 1810 13,323. In 1820 53,265. In 1830 157,448. In 1840 479,183. In 1850 851,479. In 1860 1,711,951. In 1870 2,141,510. In 1880 2,339,891. Independence, a post-village in Independence township Washington co. Pa. 34 miles WSW of Pittsburgh. Pop. of the township in 1900, 772.

Independence, a post-village of Washington co. Tex. 12 miles NE of Brunkam. Pop. 50.

Independence, a post-village, capital of Grayson co. Va. on the New River about 50 miles E by S. of Abingdon. Pop. about 15.

Independence, a post-hamlet of Lewis co. Wash. Pop. about 15.

Independence, a post-town of Prenton co. W. Va. on the Baltimore and Ohio R. 11 miles ENE of Gratton. Pop. in 1900, 206.

Independence, a banking post-village of Trempealeau co., Wis. 30 miles NNE of Wisconsin, Minn. on the Green Bay and Western R. It has flour-mills, etc. Pop. in 1900, 630.

Independence Bay, at the NE extremity of the mainland of Greenland, discovered by Peary. Approximate lat. 81° 37' N.

Independence Creek, N. Y. rises in Hamilton co. and enters the Black River about 3 miles E of Marburg.

Independence, Mount, in western Vermont, about 2 miles SE of Fort Ticonderoga, N. Y. It is chiefly distinguished as having contained important military fortifications in the early history of the country.

Independencia (san-dá-pén-dén-sha-é) Bay, an inlet of Peru, on the Pacific coast, 40 miles S of Pisco. It was formerly resorted to for guano.

Independencia, a town of Uruguay. See FRAY BARTOL.

Independent Hill, a post-hamlet of Prince William co. Va. 8 miles SE of Briscoe station.

Index, a post-hamlet of Cass co. Mo., 6 miles S. of Grand City.

Index, a post-village of Snohomish co., Wash., on the Great Northern R. The banking point is Moscow.

Index Peak, Wyo. a volcanic peak near the source of Clark Fork and 1 mile N of Pilot Peak. It has an altitude of 11,740 feet.

India, a vast empire belonging to the British crown, consisting of the great central peninsula of southern Asia, an extensive region to the N of the peninsula, and a narrow strip along the E. side of the Bay of Bengal. A part of this empire (Burma) belongs geographically to Indo-China, and another part, W of the Indus, lies outside of India in the physical sense. In a broader sense, India includes the whole of Indo-China, to which the name Farther India has been applied. The name Hindustan was formerly used as synonymous with India (in the narrower sense), and in a more proper signification (in its original sense) has designated the north-central part of India (the region of the upper Ganges basin, with part of the Punjab), the land par excellence of the Hindus. British India is bounded on the N by Matura (Chinese) Turkistan, Tibet (from which it is separated by the Himalaya Mountains), Nepal, and Bhutan on the W by Afghanistan and Beluchistan, on the E by China and Siam; and on the other sides by the Indian Ocean (mainly the Bay of Bengal and the Arabian Sea). The peninsula of India terminates in Cape Comorin in lat. 8° 5' N. On its extremity lies the large island of Ceylon which is not included in the Indian empire. On the N the Indian realm extends to where the Hindu Kush and Karakoram meet, in about lat. 36° 30' N. Its length, from N to S is about 2000 miles, and the extreme breadth from E. to W (if we include all of Beluchistan now under British control) is about equal. India comprises many native states besides the territory directly subject to British rule. Over these the British have control, but they allow the native princes to govern, guaranteeing external protection and internal tranquillity upon payment of an annual tribute. Some of these are required to provide a native force, placed at the disposal of the British. For administrative and political purposes the possessions of the British Empire in India (provinces and native states) are distributed as follows:

The peninsula of India has a very regular coast-line of about 6000 miles, the gulfs of Cambay and Cutch on the W, being the only indentations of any extent, and is very deficient in harbors. In physical features India is extremely diversified consisting (exclusive of the regions formerly constituting the kingdom of Burma) of three distinct parts,—a peninsular table-land, a vast circumvallation of mountains, and a series of low plains. The table-land occupies generally the space between the coast ranges and agglomerated hills of what have been designated the Eastern and Western Ghats and the Vindhya Mountains on the N. It has a mean height of 1400 to 2000 feet, and its surface is sprinkled over with isolated conical hills, rising to 2000 ft. above the plain, or 4000 to 5000 ft. above the sea. This table-land is divided into two portions—the Deccan in the N. between the Nerbudda and Krishna (Krishna) Rivers, including the valley of Berar, and the plateau of Mysore, between the Krishna River and the Nilgiri Hills. A large portion of this region (the Deccan) whose general slope, as indicated by the drainage, is towards the S. is occupied by a basaltic trap formation (dating from the Cretaceous period) the thickness of which in some parts is not less than 6000 ft. and to the disintegration of which is due the remarkably fertile soil which has so generously lent itself to the cultivation of cotton and the cereals. Between this and the Himalayas lies the immense Gangetic plain in the E. comprehending the vast tract of level country drained by the Ganges and its affluents, the lower part of which is annually submerged for several months. This plain, which is in greater part con-stratum of the detrital material derived from the denudation of the Himalayas, and seems to have had little or no existence before the uplift (at various times in the Tertiary period) of the great mountain bulwark, is exceedingly fertile and the most thickly populated portion of India. In the W the great sandy desert called the Thuri (Thar) intersected by the Indus, extends from the Punjab to the Runn of Ootah, a distance of about 500 miles with a similar breadth forming part of the generally arid region extending into Central Asia and northern Africa. Gradually rising towards the interior it unites with the 'height of land' (no separating mountain) which forms the low Indo-Gangetic divide. The culminating points of the peninsular portion of India are found in the Nilgiri (Doda-betta, 8758 ft.) and the Anamalli Hills of the Cardamum Mountains, near the extreme south (8768 ft.). The great mountain bulwark of the Himalayas in the N which presents a practically unbroken wall between the Pamir and the headstreams of the Irrawadi, and is penetrated by passes rarely falling below 17,000 ft. and often rising to upward of 20,000 ft., contains the loftiest mountain-summits of the globe (Everest, 29,002 ft., Godwin-Austen or Dapsang, known also as Peak K² Kanchenjunga, Dhaulagiri etc.) It is broken through by the Indus, Sutlej, Ganges, and Brahmaputra. See HIMALAYA MOUNTAINS and KANAKS.

The largest rivers of India are the Indus, Sutlej, and Chenab (tributaries of the Indus) Ganges, Jumna (affluent of the Ganges) Brahmaputra, Irrawadi and Salween (both in Burma) Godavary, Krishna, and Nerbudda. The Indus, with its magnificent tributaries which intersect the Punjab and the Ganges (with its effluents the Jumna, Gomti, Gogra, Gandak etc.) and the Brahmaputra derive their chief supplies from the melting of the snows on the Himalayas. The Godavary and Krishna, the principal streams of the peninsular part of India flowing towards the Bay of Bengal originate in the western mountains, and are fed by the rains which fall over these, to the extent of 100 inches or more, during June, July, and August. Whether fed by snow or by rain these rivers are in flood at the same period of the year and their waters are sent to the ocean through tracts of the finest country in the world. Canals for irrigation have been constructed in India on a gigantic scale.

The climate of India is very varied. The temperature varies extremely according to latitude and elevation. On the plains in the S showers are frequent at all seasons in central India the rains are extremely light. In the N there are both summer and winter rains. In Kashmir (on both sides of the lower Indus) there is no rainy season and showers fall only at intervals of years. Near the level of the sea the annual rainfall is at Madras 55, at Bombay 75 and at Calcutta 80 inches. On the highlands, again, the rainfall is immense (at Cherra Panji in the Khasi Hills in Assam, it is 500-600 inches in a year—indeed, has reached the extraordinary figure of upward of 800 inches). At the result of this, the productiveness of the different regions presents the most striking contrasts. In the upper and arid regions of Bengal famine recurs at regular intervals of eighteen or nineteen years, and in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh at intervals of seven to ten years while in the moist alluvial plains food products are superabundant. The heat is intense in the region of the plains, whereas in the hilly and mountainous regions, 3000 to 7000 feet above the sea, the climate is healthy, and there mountains are established as a refuge from the heat of the lowlands. At Madras the average temperature of the hottest month (May) is 87° and at Calcutta 85° of the coldest month, 75° and 66°. At Darjiling Pass at an elevation of 1100 feet, the July temperature is about 61°. In the N of the Indian Ocean, the SW monsoon blows from March to October; the NE monsoon succeeds, and continues from October to March. The SW monsoon brings foul weather and the wind blows with greater force during the three days of the NE monsoon when the sky is generally clear.

The vegetation of India is exceedingly varied, as would naturally be expected in a tropical region of so vast a latitudinal extent and extending through so many climatic zones. Subarctic types are found in the upper mountain tracts, where stray flowering plants are still met with at elevations of 17,000-18,000 feet. Forests no longer occupy any very large extent of territory except in central India and along the mountain slopes, and much of the remaining forest tract is now under government protection. Among the more useful trees are the teak, mandal blackwood, shorea, disodur and various other odors and conifers, numerous species of palm the oak, etc. The bamboo is one of the most serviceable products of the jungle. Among the remaining vegetable types mention should be made of the magnolia, rhododendron, camphor, and fig (baobab).

Extensive tracts of country are covered with dense jungles, and at the mouths of the rivers, especially in the delta of the Ganges, immense marshes, with a thick rank vegetation, are the resort of formidable wild animals. The fauna of India comprises various apes, the tiger, leopard, lion (in the NW) several species of bear, wild-dog, rhinoceros, buffalo, elephant, numerous large and small deer and antelope birds of brilliant plumage (pheasants, peacocks, trogons, snakes, pigeons) the gharial among crocodiles the cobra and a host of other venomous serpents to whose fatal bite from 18,000 to 22,000 of the inhabitants annually fall victims.

The chief vegetable products of India are wheat, rice, and other cereals, cotton, jute, sugar, indigo, opium, oil-seeds, tobacco, tea, and timber. Wheat is grown in most abundance in the Punjab and in the United Provinces; barley and millet are extensively consumed by the population throughout the peninsula. Rice is the staple food of the inhabitants of Bengal and Burma. Cotton is most largely grown in the central area of the peninsula, but is not restricted to it; its cultivation has shown marked advances during the last 50 years. The sugar-cane is grown nearly all over the peninsula and in Bengal and the United Provinces. Indigo is still cultivated in Bengal proper where it is a staple product, but it no longer holds its former importance. Opium is a government monopoly and its cultivation is restricted to certain regions, notably the Gangetic country about Benares. Tea has been grown for years in Assam and lower Bengal, and it is also cultivated over extensive tracts on the slopes of the Himalayas, where it grows at an elevation of 5000 feet. Tea is grown also in the Nilgiris where to a certain extent coffee is also cultivated, and the cinchona plant has been successfully introduced there, at Darjiling, and in other localities.

The total acreage under crops was, in 1900-01 198,800,000, of which 28,165,000 acres were given over to the cultivation of wheat 82,500,000 to other food grains 75,100,000 to rice; 12,050,000 to oil seeds 0,500,000 to cotton; 2,575,000 to sugar-cane 1,000,000 to tobacco 884,000 to indigo and 542,000 to tea.

The mineral resources of India comprise the ores of iron, copper, lead, and tin (southern Burma), seemingly only limited quantities of silver and gold (chiefly in Mysore), fairly extensive deposits of coal (Damodar region of western Bengal, the Nerbudda and Godavary valleys), petroleum, salt, and various precious stones as the diamond (now only recently found) and ruby (Burma). The output of coal was in 1901, 0,685,727 tons, representing the work of 427 collieries.

The exports include cotton, rice, seeds, jute, hides and skins, opium, tea, wheat, lac, coffee, indigo, raw wool, wood, oils, salt-petre, silk, provisions, iron and metals, chemicals and drugs, textile fabrics, metal-manufactures, etc. The exports (including precious metals) in the year 1902-03 amounted to 252,700,000 the imports, to 274,190,000. About one-half of the exports go to Great Britain, the British possessions, and China. Germany, France, the United States, and Egypt together take about one-fourth. The bulk of the remainder goes to Japan, Belgium, Italy, and Austria-Hungary. The bulk of the imports come from Great Britain. All but about 4 per cent. of the foreign trade of India is by sea. There were, in 1901-02, 193 cotton-mills in operation 45 jute-mills, 4 woollen mills, and 0 paper mills, employing collectively about 292,000 hands.

Great public works have been executed in India by the British mainly in the way of canals constructed chiefly for irrigation purposes, and of a magnificent system of railways in making which the greatest engineering difficulties have been overcome. The number of miles operated by the railways was, in 1900 26,373.

In consequence of large expenditure for public works famine-relief, etc., the public debt of the empire is large, and taxation, though apparently light, bears heavily upon a people where the rate of wages is so low as in India.

The king of England bears the title of Emperor of India. The administration of the Indian Empire in England is vested in the secretary of state for India (a member of the cabinet) who is assisted by a council. At the head of the government in India is the governor-general and viceroy who is appointed by the crown and is assisted by a council. The various departments of the executive are entrusted to the members of the council, except the department of foreign affairs, which is directly under the governor-general. The governor-general's council is expanded by the appointment of a large number of additional members into a legislative council which is empowered to make laws for India. Of the various provinces of India, two, Madras and Bombay are administered by governors appointed by the crown. The remaining divisions are under lieutenant-governors and chief commissioners. These are appointed by the gov-ever-general, the Hindustani-governments with the approval of the crown. The rulers of the native states have no right to make war or peace or to maintain diplomatic relations with each other or any foreign power. There were, in 1904, 784 municipal towns, embracing a population of 14,500,000. These municipalities enjoy a large degree of autonomy; the local governing bodies in the large towns and in many of the smaller ones being elected by the rate-payers. The capital of India is Calcutta. About 325,000 men (exclusive of about 25,000 volunteers) are employed in the British military service of India, and one-third of them are Europeans.

In this extensive country a great diversity of language prevails. In northern India the numerous and various dialects are of Indo-European stock, allied in roots to the Sanskrit, the most important being Hindi and Bengali, the former spoken by about 90,000,000 people and the latter by upward of 40,000,000. Punjabi, a modern Hindi dialect, is the language of the bulk of the people of the Punjab. In southern India the leading tongues are Telugu, Tamil, Canarese, and other Dravidian languages and Malabar. The Marathi, a mixed tongue, is the language of the Mahrattas (in Gwalior, Indore, Baroda, the Deccan, etc.). Hindustani, the lingua franca of India, is an adulterated form of Hindi, having many Persian, Arab, Turkish, and Dravidian words. Brahmanism prevails throughout India proper, the next most important religion being Moham-medanism, which numbers more adherents than are to be found in all the rest of Asia. Buddhism is the religion of Burma and of some of the tribes on the slopes of the Himalayas. Devil worship and fetish-worship prevail among the aboriginal tribes. In the Punjab, which was subjected to British rule in 1849, the inhabitants are partly Sikhs, or disciples of Nanak, who bear an implacable hatred to the Mohammedans, the most numerous class there. Of the total population of 254,000,000 (census of 1901) the numbers assigned to the various religions are about: Hindus, 207,000,000; Mohammedans, 62,000,000; Buddhists, 9,000,000; Animism (spirit-worshipers), nearly 4,000,000; Christians, 3,000,000; Sikhs, 2,000,000; Jains, upward of 1,000,000. There are about 100,000 Parsis and about 20,000 Jews. The aboriginal races of India have no literature and almost no traditions. The Mohammedan invasions of India began at the beginning of the eleventh century and was completed in the sixteenth century, but most of the Mohammedans now in India spring from a Brahmanical stock. The Parsis (Zoroastrians) are descended from refugees from religious persecution in Persia. Though small in number they have in Bombay earned a distinguished name for public manifestations, as well as success in commerce, and they have led the way in the cause of female education. The government of India has been devoting much attention to education. English is taught in all schools and is highly prized by the native youth of India as a means towards gaining employment in government and mercantile offices. But a very small fraction of the population, however, has the benefit of school instruction. At the head of the system of higher education are the examining bodies known as the universities of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, and the Punjab, which have a large number of colleges affiliated with them. In 1901 but 9 cities in India returned a population of over 200,000. They were Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Hyderabad, Lucknow, Rangoon (Burma), Benares, Delhi and Lahore. The number of cities having a population exceeding 50,000 was 75. India abounds in magnificent monuments of Mohammedan art (mosques, mausoleums, palaces) in remarkable rock-cut Hindu and Buddhist temples, and in the ruins of great cities. In the regions where resort is had to artificial irrigation the vast water-tanks, in places miles in circuit, excite the wonderment of the traveler.

The invasion of India by the Aryans (Indo-Europeans) of which family the Hindus form a branch occurred in pre-historic times. The sacred books of the Hindus known as the Vedas date from a period antecedent by many centuries to the beginning of the Christian era. At the dawn of history there were many independent Hindu states in India, the most famous of which was Magadha. Buddha lived about 500 B.C. In the third century A.C. Buddhism obtained a firm foothold and it continued to spread until several centuries after the beginning of the Christian era, when Hinduism resuscitated itself. Alexander the Great made a victorious advance into India in 325 B.C. About two centuries later the Greco-Bactrian realm was extended into the valley of the Indus and that of the upper Ganges. The first invasion of Mahmud of Ghazni in 1001 inaugurated the period of Mohammedan conquest. The Mohammedan empire of the Great Mogul was established by Babur, a descendant of Tamerlane, in 1526. Under his successors, the most celebrated of whom were Akbar and Aurangzeb, this realm attained an extraordinary height of splendor, and Agra and Delhi assumed in modern Mohammedan art the place occupied by Bagdad and Cordova in the Middle Ages. In 1498 India was reached by way of the Cape of Good Hope by the Portuguese navigator, Vasco da Gama. In 1510 the Portuguese took Goa, which rose to be a great centre of commerce. The English East India Company was chartered in 1600 and the French East India Company in 1664. An English factory was established at Surat in 1612. In 1662 Portugal transferred Bombay to England and in 1686 an English factory was established at Calcutta. The middle of the seventeenth century witnessed the rise of the Mahratta power. The struggle for supremacy between France and England (1745-48) was decided in favor of the English, who soon built up a mighty empire. In 1755 the Mogul emperor made a formal cession of Bengal and other territories to the English East India Company. Warren Hastings was installed as first governor general in 1774, and in 1774 a Board of Control was created for India. In 1792-93 the kingdom of Mysore was destroyed by the British, and in 1801 they annexed the Carnatic, a country on the E. coast of the Indian peninsula, which had been ruled by the nawabs of Arcot. In 1803-18 the Mahrattas succumbed to the British arms. Sind was annexed in 1843, the Punjab in 1849 and Oudh in 1856. The mutiny of the Sepoys (or native soldiers) in the service of the East India Company in 1857-58 came near putting an end to the British domination and in 1858 the government of India was transferred to the crown. In 1870 Victoria assumed the title of Empress of India. In 1885-86 Burma was conquered and annexed.

India, a post-village of Ellis co. Tex. Pop. 80.
Indiana, a north-central state of the American Union extending from Lake Michigan to the Ohio River bounded on the N. by Lake Michigan and the state of Michigan on the E. by Ohio, on the S. by Kentucky and on the W. by Illinois. Its northern limit is the parallel of 41° 40' N. lat. The entire southern boundary is formed by the Ohio River and on the E. the Wabash River separates the state from Illinois. Area of the land-surface, 36,810 sq. m. and of the adjoining waters 440 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The surface is on the whole level and has generally a slight southern slope. In the extreme NW is a sandy tract, covered with dunes, to the southward of which occurs a flat region containing much marsh-land and a number of shallow lakes. The NE also has a number of small lakes and bays. Northward from the White and Wabash rivers the country is generally level or gently rolling and much of the soil is exceedingly fertile. In the E and SW there is much broken and hilly land especially near the streams where the country is still partially wooded. The highest elevations probably nowhere reach 1500 feet. The timber of the state is very generally of the hard wood kinds. Oak abounds, especially northward. Ash, hickory, maple, whiteoak, black walnut, and other useful trees are plentiful. Of coniferous trees the NW affords pines, tamarack trees abound in many marshy regions, and the cypress grows in the SW.

Rivers.—The chief streams, besides the Ohio, are the Wabash, which, with its tributaries (the White, Tippecanoe, Eel, Miami, etc., and other streams), drains the greater part of the state, the Whitewater tributary to the Ohio, the Little and Big Pigeon also tributary to the Ohio, the St. Joseph, Menominee, Kankakee, etc. The only lake of considerable size is English Lake, which is a part of the upper waters of the Kankakee.

Geology, Minerals, etc.—A large portion of the state is covered by glacial drift. The northwestern and eastern parts belong to the Silurian system. Between these areas that system is mainly overlaid by Devonian and Carboniferous strata, and in the limestone regions of the S. occur some remarkable and interesting caves. In the SW and W there are important coal-fields. The block coal, a valuable coal for steam and for iron, is highly prized for its adaptation to the manufacture of steel and the better grades of iron. There are good coaling gas, and small coals, which together underlie an area of several thousand square miles. The output of coal in 1901 was 5,916,235 short tons. In 1903, 10,794,692 tons. The field of natural gas is one of the largest in the world, but it would seem from the diminution in pressure that before many years the supply of gas might be exhausted. The number of wells in 1903 was 5514. The production of petroleum was, in 1903, 9,154,411 barrels, valued at $10,474,137. The iron product has become very considerable, but the ores are mainly from the Lake Superior region or from Missouri and Tennessee. Bog-ore and local deposits of higher grades of iron exist, however, and in some places have been wrought. Other minerals are fire-brick and flint, clays, kaolin, limestone, and good sandstone. Salt springs exist, and other spring yielding medicinal waters are common in the fl. part of Indiana. Spoom salts and saltpetre have been obtained from the earth of some of the caves.

Agriculture etc.—Indiana takes a leading position both as a grain-producing and as a stock-raising state. The cereal crops, hay, live-stock, provisions, flour and meats, potatoes, tobacco, dairy products, fruit, timber and other forest products are the chief articles of export. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were corn 153,300,800 bushels wheat, 6 411 702 bushels oats 44,866 035 bushels barley, 115 633 bushels rye, 485 722 bushels; potatoes, 0 000 520 bushels and hay 1 003,452 tons. Other products of large aggregate value are grass- and clover-seeds, linseed, maple sugar, sorghum syrup, pines, sweet potatoes, honey and wax. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 4,250 064 pounds.

Manufactures—The leading manufacturing industry in that of meat-packing the products of which in 1900 were valued at $43 863 273. The centres of this industry are Hammond, Indianapolis, and Fort Wayne. The flour and grain-mill products were valued in 1900 at $30 160 765. The manufactures of iron, lumber and cheese are all of importance. To these may be added those of glass, woodwork, machinery, carriages and railway-cars, castings, furniture, starch, bricks, saddlery, cooperage, beer, malt, spirits, textile wares, boots and shoes, clothing, and agricultural implements.

Railroads—The railroad system extends to almost every part of the state, and has greatly limited the navigation of canals and rivers. In 1847 the Madison and Indianapolis R. was opened. In that year there were 43 miles of railroad in the state. In 1850 228 miles in 1855 2163 miles in 1870 3177 miles in 1880 4373 miles in 1890 6106 miles in 1900 6597 miles.

Education, State Institutions—The leading educational institutions are the State University at Bloomington, Purdue University at Lafayette with schools of natural science, engineering, agriculture, etc., De Pauw University at Greencastle, Indianapolis University (including Butler College at Irvington), University of Notre Dame du Lac, at Notre Dame, Manchester College, at North Manchester, Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, Vincennes University and Rose Polytechnic Institute, at Terre Haute. There are state normal schools at Indianapolis and Terre Haute, a normal college at Covington and private normal schools at Angola, Valparaiso, Rochester and Muncie and several schools of law, medicine, and theology. The state has hospitals for the insane at Logansport, Richmond Evansville, and Indianapolis, a state soldiers' home at Lafayette, soldiers' orphan's home at Knightstown, a school for deaf dumb and blind at Indianapolis, a state reformatory at Jellisonville, a state prison at Michigan City etc.

Counties—There were 91 counties in 1900. Adams, Allen, Bartholomew, Benton, Blackford, Boone, Brown, Carroll, Cass, Clark, Clay, Clinton, Crawford, Daviess, Dearborn, Decatur, Dekalb, Delaware, Dubois, Elkhart, Fayette, Floyd, Fountain, Franklin, Fulton, Gibson, Grant, Greene, Hamilton, Hancock, Harrison, Hendricks, Henry, Howard, Huntington, Jackson, Jasper, Jay, Jefferson, Jennings, Johnson, Knox, Kosciusko, Lagrange, Lake, Lawrence, Madison, Marion, Marshall, Martin, Miami, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Newton, Noble, Ohio, Orange, Owen, Parks, Perry, Pike, Porter, Posey, Pulaski, Putnam, Randolph, Ripley, Rush, Scott, Shelby, Spencer, Starke, Steuben, St. Joseph, Sullivan, Switzerland, Tipton, Union, Vanderburg, Vermillion, Vigo, Wabash, Warren, Warrick, Washington, Wayne, Wells, White, and Whitley.

Cities—The principal cities are Indianapolis, the capital (pop. in 1900, 169 184). Evansville, the commercial centre of the SW ($9 807). Fort Wayne, the commercial centre of the NE (45,115). Constitution, Laws, etc.—The first constitution of the state was framed in 1816 that now in force was adopted in 1851. The governor is chosen for a term of four years. Most of the other important executive officers are elected for two years. The legislature consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives the members of the former are elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The judiciary is elective. Thirteen representatives are sent by the state to the Congress of the United States.

History—A French settlement grew up at Vincennes in the first half of the eighteenth century. In 1783 the country came under British sway. In 1787 the Northwest Territory was organized, which included all the United States territories N of the Ohio River. Indiana Territory was organized in 1800 it included the present states of Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, and part of Minnesota. Michigan Territory was set off in 1805. Illinois Territory was detached in 1809. Indiana was admitted into the Union as a state in 1816. Meanwhile the power of the Indians had been crushed by Harrison's victory over the Prophet, the brother of Tecumseh, at Tippecanoe (1811). After the war of 1812-15 with England there was a prodigious stream of immigration to this new and beautiful region. A period of great prosperity was interrupted by the financial panic of 1837 but after a few years normal conditions were restored, and the economic development of the state proceeded again with rapid strides. In the last quarter of the nineteenth century the manufacturing industries of Indiana rose to large dimensions.

Population—The population in 1800 was 5641, of which 4875 were within the present state limits. In 1810, 24,620 chiefly in the present limits. In 1815 60 014. In 1820 147 178. In 1830 342 831. In 1840, 638 866. In 1850 968,410. In 1860 1 330 428. In 1870 1 660,007. In 1880, 1 978 301. In 1890 2 192,404. and in 1900 2 510 463. Of the total population in 1900 145 205 were foreign-born.

Indiana, a county in the west-central part of Pennsylvania, has an area of 820 sq. in. It is bounded on the S by the Conemaugh River and is also drained by Mahoning Black Lick and Two Lick creeks. Indianapolis, in-de-an-ap-oh-is a city the capital of Indiana and of Marion on is on the West Fork of the White River 108 miles NW of Cincinnati on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, the Lake Erie and Western and several other railroads, Lat. 39 49 N. lon. 86° 8' W. The site is nearly level and covers a very extended area. The streets generally cross one another at right angles, and especially in the residence quarter present a fine appearance in their handsome houses and shaded lawns. The city contains a fine court-house, the state institution for the deaf dumb, and blind a hospital for the insane, a state library a public library (with upward of 190 000 volumes) masonic hall the Heron Art Museum and Art School city hospital the University of Indianapolis, medical colleges and various collegiate institutions. The capital building measuring 492 feet in length was erected at a cost of $2,000 000. Other noteworthy buildings are the new post-office, city hall Commercial Club, the Polytechnic (used for literary purposes) national arsenal the chamber of commerce and an academy of music. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, by Bruno Schwardt, of Berlin having a shaft 285 feet in height, stands in Monument Place. Indianapolis is noted for the beauty of its parks (Riverside, Garfield, St. Clair Brookside, etc.), which together cover an area of nearly 1200 acres. The railroads entering it traverse localities unsurpassed in agricultural resources, and furnish the best facilities for bringing the country products to the city and for distributing the city manufactures through the country. The region is rich in mineral resources, and Indianapolis derives great advantage from the proximity of large natural gas- and oil fields. The city's industries are represented by about 1100 manufacturing establishments employing more than 25 000 people, with an annual output of $70 000 000 worth of products. Among the leading industrial establishments are agricultural-implement factories, architectural iron works, belting factories, car-works, carriage- and wagon factories, canned-goods factories, chemical works, electric-light machinery factories, numerous foundries, engine- and boiler works, fertilizer-factories, milling machinery works, railroad-frog and switch works, furniture-factories, malleable-iron works, medicinal laboratories, pork-packing establishments, stove-foundries, starch works, stove- and heading factories, brewer's woolen mills, etc. Other manufactures are those of terra-cotta, glass, pianos and organs, sewing-machines, and cotton goods. The rearing yards for live-stock cover upward of 100 acres and the stock-sheds have a capacity for 4000 cattle and 35 000 swine. The grain-elevators have a capacity for 1 000 000 bushels. Owing to its central location and railroad facilities, Indianapolis is a favorite meeting place for organized bodies and is widely known as the Convention City. The place became the capital of the state in 1825. Pop. in 1850 8496. in 1860 18 611. in 1870 43,244. in 1880, 75,060. in 1890 165,455. in 1900, 169,184. Elevation above the sea, 766 feet.

Indian Ocean (anc. Ma ru Indicum or Indica Gulf), a vast sea, separated from the Pacific Ocean on the E by the Malay Archipelago and Australia and from the Atlantic Ocean by Africa on the W, and enclosed by the coasts of Asia on the N. It extends from about lat. 25° N in the Arabian Sea to the Antarctic Circle. Its southern limit is differently stated by different geographers, some of whom consider it to be a line drawn from Bass Strait to the Cape of Good Hope, the body of water S of that imaginary line being spoken of as the South Sea. The N shores are rendered singularly irregular by the projection of three vast peninsulas, Arabia, India, and Indo-China, which are separated by the Arabian Sea and Bay of Bengal. It communicates with the China Sea and the various Moluccan waters by the Strait of Malacca, Sunda Strait, Strait of Pizarro, the Bali and Lombok Passages, and Timor Sea. Two great nearly land-locked seas project northward from the NW portion of the Indian Ocean—the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf the connecting channels being the straits of Bab-el-Mandeb and Ormuz. The other principal seas are the Mozambique Channel, the gulfs of Cutch and Cambray the Gulf of Mannar Palk Strait, and Bass Strait. The most important islands are Madagascar Mauritius, Réunion the Comoro Islands, the Seychelles, Socotra, the Laccadives, Maldives, Chagos, Ceylon and the Andaman and Nicobar groups. The main affluents are in Asia, the Salween, Irrawadi Brahmaputra, Ganges, Godavary, Krishna, Nerbudda, Indus, and the Shat-el-Arab formed by the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates and in Africa, the Zambezi. The monsoons, or periodical winds, prevail in the N part blowing from the SW between April (or March) and October and from the SE during the rest of the year. Tempests are general at the periods of change and between lat. 10° and 40° S violent hurricanes frequently occur.

In the S part of the Indian Ocean the equatorial current, connecting the Pacific and Atlantic, flows from E to W with velocities varying from 20 to 60 miles per day and is deflected southward along the coast of Madagascar to be again turned east. A SW current also flows along the African coast through the Mozambique Channel and is known as the Mozambique Current. The Antarctic Drift enters into the more southerly portion of this basin having an E and (along the Western Australian coast) a northerly trend. The average depth of the ocean is assumed to be about 11 000 feet. A depth of 11 000 feet has recently been measured about lat. 18° S. and lon 102° E. The maximum heat of the water occurs seemingly in the Arabian Sea, where it reaches 87.5° F.

Indian Territory, a territorial region of the United States, primarily set apart by the general government as an abode for tribal Indians, is bounded N by Kansas E by Missouri and Arkansas S by Texas and W by Oklahoma. Area, 31,400 sq. m. of which 400 sq. m. belong to water-surfices.

Face of the Country.—The general slope of the land is towards the SE to the lower valley of the Red River. Between the Red and Canadian rivers are several groups of hills, such as the Shawnee and the Sand Hills, which are continuations of the Ozark Mountains from Arkansas. Sugar Loaf Mountain has an elevation of 2604 feet. The rivers have broad and fertile bottom-lands which are separated from the rolling upland prairies by bluffs more or less abrupt. The valleys and southern prairies are especially rich and productive and well adapted for crops of cereals.

Rivers.—Indian Territory is well watered. The principal rivers are the Arkansas, which with the Canadian River and other tributaries, drains the northern and middle portions, and the Red River which, with numerous affluents, drains the southern section and forms the southern boundary.

Climate.—The climate is generally mild and healthful. The summers are hot, but there is an ample rainfall and not the liability to droughts which characterizes some of the neighboring sections.

Geology and Minerals.—Most of the territory is constructed of rocks of Carboniferous age, containing much good coal of a semi-bituminous character which has been extensively mined. The product in 1899 was 1,537,427 (short) tons in 1903 3,017,385 tons. Iron, copper, lead, zinc, asphaltum, petroleum, natural gas, marble, and various building-stones are more or less abundantly found.

Vegetation and Animals.—There are extensive wooded districts in the northern portion of the territory. A belt of forest known as the Crow-Timbers from 5 to 60 miles wide, extends along the border of the Carboniferous formation in the western part of the territory. A large lumber industry has also grown up in the southeast. The native wild animals have very generally disappeared, but some bears and other fur-bearing animals, wild turkeys, and several varieties of grouse are found. Many portions of the territory, especially the rocky regions in the Cherokee and Creek Nations, are well adapted for grazing.

Agriculture, Industries.—The territory enjoying a rich and fertile soil, with a sufficiency of rain fall, is well adapted to agricultural pursuits. In 1900 36.6 per cent. of the land was included in farms. The principal crops were corn, wheat, oats, and hay. Fruits and vegetables are largely grown and much attention is paid to stock raising. The number of cattle in 1900 exceeded 1,500,000. The most important industry is the milling of flour and corn, with a product, in 1900 valued at $1,198,472. Cotton-ginning and the making of cotton-seed oil and oak constitute the second industry; the combined products were valued, in 1900 at $707,467.

Education, Transportation.—The more civilized tribes have their own school laws, and considerable advance has been made in education. There are a large number of day schools, and several boarding, industrial and manual-labor schools. Collegiate or academic institutions are found at Bocene (Indian University), Muskogee (Spaulding Institute, Henry Kendall College), Tahlequah (Cherokee National Seminary), Vinita, Wagoner and Ryan. The school population in 1899 was about 90,000 of whom about four-fifths were whites. Most of the Indians preserve the use of their old languages. There were in 1900 about 1500 miles of rail way in operation.

Nations.—Indian Territory has 5 nations' (Cherokees, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek and Seminole) and 7 reservations (Modoc, Ottawa, Peoria, Quapaw, Sacca, Shawnee, and Wyandotte). The Cherokees and Creek nations comprise most of the northern half of the territory and the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations most of the southern half. The Seminole Nation embraces a small district in the W.

History.—This region was purchased by the United States as part of the Louisiana Territory from France in 1800, was selected in 1832 as the abode of the southern Indians E. of the Mississippi River who were to be removed by the United States government from their ancient hunting-grounds, and set apart for that purpose by Congress in 1834. Besides its present limits, the territory thus set apart included the greater part of what is now the territory of Oklahoma, and also portions of Kansas and Nebraska. Between the years 1833 and 1838 the Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, and Chickasaws were removed thither, and they were followed by the Seminoles in 1845. Together they constitute what are now known as the five civilized tribes. The government covenanted to maintain the exclusive title of the land to the Indians and to protect them from the westward tide of white migration.

In 1860 the area of this grant was stated to be over 185,000 sq. m. but by subsequent treaties the Indians ceded back to the United States the region lying N. of the 37th parallel. In 1866 the western portion of their domain was ceded to the government in consideration of the payment of a fixed valuation for the land thus released. The treaty stipulated that these lands were to be used by the government for the settlement of other Indian tribes or freedmen, but was not to be open to white settlers. This region was known as the Oklahoma district, and the Sacca, Foxes, and Potawatomies were settled here in 1867 the Cheyennes and Arapahoes in 1869 the Iowas and Kickapoos in 1883 and at various other times, both on this land and among the civilized tribes themselves, reservations were established for remnants and parts of other tribes. By further payment to the Creeks and Seminoles in 1866, and to the Cherokees in 1863, the government obtained a removal of the clause in the treaties prohibiting white immigration and was thus enabled to throw open and organize Oklahoma Territory. Under the treaties the Indians were looked upon as wards of the United States government. The lands allotted to each tribe were held in common and each nation regulated its internal affairs according to its own code of primitive laws. Forms of government were organized similar to those of the states of the Union. The civilized tribes were slave-holders, and during the war of 1861-65 took sides with the Southern Confederacy and for a time were considered to have forfeited their lands. By the treaties of 1866 amnesty was granted and the liberated slaves were given certain landed rights. Among the Creeks and Seminoles the amalgamation with the African race has been so great that the characteristics of the latter are predominant. Intermarrying of the white and Indian races has been encouraged by the five nations and in this way the white man readily acquired citizenship. But few full-blooded Indians are found to-day. While the few Indians of pure blood still technically act as legislators, the whites who have become citizens or their half-breed descendants really control the affairs of the nations and receive the benefit of the revenues. The Federal courts have now jurisdiction in the Indian Territory. The United States government in recent years has been directing its efforts to secure changes in the tenure of land so that it shall be held in sovereignty a medium which would admit of the Indians becoming citizens of the United States.

Population and Towns.—The total population, according to the census of 1900 was 183,498 made up as follows: Indians of the 5 civilized tribes, 53,063; Indians of other tribes, 8780; colored citizens and claimants, 14,224; colored persons not citizens, 3500; whites, 107,987; Chinese, 8. The population was in 1900 391,960. In June, 1901 413,090, of whom about 300,000 were whites and 10,000 negroes. The principal towns are Ardmore (in the Chickasaw Nation) 3881, Muskogee, 4354; South McAlester 3479 Chickasha, 2399 Durant, Coalgate, Vinita, Wagoner, Purcell, Harts-horne, and Tahlequah (the territorial capital).

Indus (Sanskrit, Sindhu), a great river of Asia, rises in Tibet, on the N. side of the Kailas (Himalayas) in lat. 31° 28' N. lon. 82° E. near the sources of the Sutlej and Brahmaputra (Sampo) and about 60 miles from the extreme head waters of the Ganges. The stream flows NW. through Ladak acutely to Gilgit (lat. 36° N.), and is then deflected sharply SW., maintaining this general course in its traverse of the Himalaya mountains and beyond (across the Punjab, Sindh, etc.) to the sea. The total course of the river is estimated at 1800 miles and the drainage basin at 375,000 sq. m. The only important tributary of the Indus in its upper course is the Shyok which joins it on the right in British India a short distance above Lakardu. South of the mountains it receives the Kabul, and in lat. 28° 45' N. lon. 70° 25' E. 470 miles from the ocean, it is joined from the NE. by the Paghud or Sura river which brings to it the salted streams of the Punjab—the Sothi (anc. Houdrus) the Beas (anc. Hyphesus) the Chenab (anc. Aswinis) the Ravi (anc. Hydrotas) and the Jhelum (anc. Hydaspes). Below this it has no tributary of much size but repeatedly subdivides, giving off lateral streams the principal being the Pulah and Nerra branches and in about lat. 25° 10' N. the delta commences, the chief arms of which are the Buggara Sath, and Pleyari. The Indus enters the sea by a great number of mouths among which, the Kori properly an arm of the sea, is 7 miles wide and 20 feet deep. The present chief arm is the Hajanro. The delta extends from the ocean to a short distance beyond Hyderabad and from Kurrachi to Luckpat, being about 130 miles in extreme length and breadth. The only important town on the Indus is Hyderabad. The river has a total fall of about 16,000 feet; its bed at Lah is 11,000 ft. above the sea, and at Attock about 900 miles from its mouth it is 1000 ft. and in 800 ft. across and 60 ft. in depth. At this point it has a current of 6 miles an hour. Below this point it runs with great velocity mostly between high cliffs (in one place 700 ft. in elevation) as far as Chulabagh, after which its course is through a level country with a breadth usually varying from one-fourth of a mile to upward of 1 mile, and an average velocity of from 2 to 3 miles an hour. During the season when it is lowest, tides are perceptible upward to about 15 miles below Tatta, or 75 miles from the ocean. The mean annual discharge of water is estimated to be 150,000,000,000 tons, a large proportion of its waters being consumed in irrigation and evaporation. The Indus is navigable from the sea as high as the influx of the Kabul River, near Attock, about 900 miles, and its tributaries are mostly navigable to the foot of the mountains, but the channel is so encumbered by shifting banks as to be adapted only for steamers and vessels of comparatively small draught. The gavia, or long-mouthed crocodile, in numerous in the river and the alligator is found in its lagoons. The boia, a catfish, is also abundant. Fish especially the peña, a species of carp, are very abundant and form a chief article of food for the natives. The country immediately adjacent to the banks of the Indus, in its delta especially is of high fertility but on either side this region is flanked by a bare desert.

The political division of the Ionian Islands comprises Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura (Lefkada, Leucadia) Ithaca, Paxos and many smaller islands. Area, 905 sq. m. Pop. in 1884, 253,937, nearly all Greeks. Corfu off the S. coast of the Morea, was formerly included in the political division of the Ionian Islands. The surface of the Ionian Islands is very mountainous and generally covered with heath, but in some of the larger islands there are fertile plains. The greatest elevation, in Cephalonia, exceeds 5000 feet. The islands enjoy a mild climate, but suffer from lack of water. The leading products are cereals, wine, olive oil and fruits. Many of the inhabitants are busily engaged in navigation and the fisheries. The principal towns are Corfu, Zante, Argostoli and Vathi (Ithaca). These islands figured in ancient history but are only spoken of singly. They were subject to Venice from the close of the Middle Ages to 1797. In 1814 they were placed under British protection, though forming an autonomous republic. In 1864 they were annexed to the kingdom of Greece.

Iowa, I-o-wa (named from the Iowa Indians, a tribe of Dakota stock) a river of the state of Iowa, rises in Hancock co., has a generally SE course, and enters the Mississippi River in Louisiana co. about 20 miles S of Muscatine. It is about 350 miles long and is navigable to Iowa City.

Iowa, a north-central state of the American Union situated in the Mississippi Valley and bounded N. by Minnesota, E. by Wisconsin and Illinois, S. by Missouri, and W. by Nebraska and South Dakota. Its northern limit is the parallel of 43° 30' N. lat. The Mississippi River washes its E. border. On the S. is the parallel of 40° 30' N. but the Des Moines River, for a little distance, is its southern boundary. The Big Sioux and Missouri rivers on the W. respectively separate it from South Dakota and Nebraska. Area of the land-surface, 55,473 sq. m. of the appertaining waters, 850 sq. m.

Face of the Country—Iowa is for the most part what is called rolling prairie—that is, a country with no marked hills, but with long wave-like elevations of gentle slope. Some of the rivers have bold bluff and rocky banks and in some regions near the larger streams the soil and underlying drift and loess have been deeply eroded by torrents, giving to the country a broken character. This is especially true of some portions of the Missouri Valley. The highest elevation in the state, at Primghar, in O'Brien co., is 1800 feet; the lowest point, the low water surface of the Mississippi at the SE. angle of the state, is 450 feet.

The rivers are all direct or indirect tributaries of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers. Among them are the Upper Iowa, Turkey, Maquoketa, Wapashishon, Cedar, Iowa, Skunk (or Chocomaugus), Des Moines, Chariton, Crooked, Nishnabotom, Boyer, Soldier, Maple, Little Sioux, Floyd, and Rock rivers. A few of these have had a limited importance as navigable streams—many of them afford water-power at their falls. The principal lakes are in the N., and they are all small. Spirit Lake, Lake Okoboji, Clear Lake, High, Palo Alto, Butler and Storm lakes are beautiful sheets of water and the Walled Lakes, of which there are a number, present the singular phenomenon of a natural wall of loess stones surrounding their waters.

Geology and Minerals—The formations of the state belong almost entirely to the Paleozoic series, but are, as a rule, overlaid by a drift of considerable depth. In point of economic value the most important geological strata are the coal-measures. The lower coal-measures are the most important, and cover an area of about 6000 sq. m. Towards the SW occur the middle coal-measures the upper Carboniferous formation extends into the neighboring states of Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. The coals of Iowa are bituminous, and as compared with the coals of the Allegheny field they are mostly inferior in quality but they are nevertheless of the highest importance to the industrial development of a state so more abundantly supplied with timber and wood than Iowa is. The coal product was in 1900 5,272,979 short tons, valued at $7,155,341. That of 1903 was 6,410,811 short tons, valued at $10,563,910. Lead is found mainly in the galena limestone, and Dubuque has a large annual product of this commodity. Limestone, sandstone, limestone, and other building-stones, brick-materials, and bottle clays are abundant.

Vegetation—Less than one-eighth of the state is covered by natural forests, mostly of hard wood and other deciduous trees,—such as the oak, walnut, hickory, o. m., maple, cotton wood, etc. The native or wild grasses serve well as pasture age and afford a large supply of sheep hay. The wild rice of the N. of which the seed was formerly eaten by the Indians, affords a useful paper-stock. The native tanning plant (a Polygonum) is collected and employed to tanning leather for which use it is well adapted.

Agricultural Resources, Climate, etc.—There is very little absolutely waste land in the state. The prairies are everywhere covered with a deep friable loam with few stones and stumps, and with but little marsh or slough land. The blind-country of the W. has a very deep soil of good clay water always free from surplus moisture. The climate is generally very healthful although showing extremes of winter cold and summer heat (—40° and 105°-110°). The average annual rainfall is about 30 inches, well distributed in quantity for the purposes of agriculture. In 1900 Iowa took first rank in the states of the Union in the value of its farm-products and likewise in the cultivation of fruits. Corn, oats, wheat, barley and other cereals, potatoes, hay, dairy products, wool, linseed, sorghum are produced very largely. The southern portion is generally well adapted to vine-growing. The leading crops in 1900 were corn, 368,659,948 bushels; wheat, 31,795,225 bushels; oats, 139,572,138 bushels; barley, 11,708,823 bushels; rye, 1,800,870 bushels; buckwheat, 148,800 bu. hals; potatoes, 14,004,176 bushels and hay 5,005,470 tons. The amount of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 3,512,186 pounds. Iowa stands next to Texas in the value and extent of its live-stock interests.

Manufactures—The leading industry is that of meat-packing the products of which in 1900 were valued at $25,695,944. Following this is the making of butter, cheese, and condensed milk, which yielded a product valued at $16,845,977. Other important articles of manufacture are flour, lumber, furniture, carriages, woollens, soap, saddlery, agricultural and other machinery, bricks, pottery, leather, leather goods, pig lead, metalic wares, brewed and distilled liquors, linseed oil, lime, etc.

The Counties 99 in number are: Adair, Adams, Allamakee, Appanoose, Audubon, Benton, Blackhawk, Boone, Bremer, Buchanan, Buena Vista, Butler, Calhoun, Carroll, Cass, Cedar, Cerro Gordo, Cherokee, Chickasaw, Clarke, Clay, Clayton, Clinton, Crawford, Dallas, Davis, Decatur, Delaware, Des Moines, Dickinson, Dubuque, Emmett, Fayette, Floyd, Franklin, Fremont, Greene, Grundy, Guthrie, Hamilton, Hancock, Hardin, Harrison, Henry, Howard, Humboldt, Ida, Iowa, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Johnson, Jones, Keokuk, Kosciusko, Lee, Line, Louisa, Lucas, Lyon, Madison, Mahaska, Marion, Marshall, Mills, Mitchell, Monona, Monroe, Montgomery, Muscatine, O'Brien, Osceola, Page, Palo Alto, Plymouth, Pocahontas, Polk, Pottawattamie, Poweshiek, Ringgold, Sac, Scott, Shelby, Sioux, Story, Tama, Taylor, Union, Van Buren, Wapella, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, Winnebago, Winneshiek, Woodbury, Worth, and Wright.

Cities—The largest are Des Moines, the capital (pop. in 1900, 22,158); Dubuque, on the Mississippi (pop. 50,501); Davenport, on the Mississippi, opposite Rock Island, Ill. (36,264); Sioux City (22,111); Council Bluffs (22,602);

Cedar Rapids (24,856) Burlington, a manufacturing and business centre on the Mississippi (23 391) Clinton (23,698), Ottumwa (18,107) Bookbuk, on the Mississippi at the SE. angle of the state (14 641) Muscatine Watocoo

Railroads—Iowa has greatly extended its railroad system so that nearly all the counties are traversed by lines which extend directly or indirectly to every important point within the state. In 1855 there were 63 miles of railroad in 1860 655 in 1870 2096 in 1890 8418 in 1900 9405

Educative—The State University is at Iowa City and provides professional as well as academic instruction for both sexes. Other leading collegiate institutions are Drake University at Des Moines Griswold College, at Davenport Highland Park College, at Des Moines Upper Iowa University at Fayette, Iowa Wesleyan University at Mount Pleasant Central University of Iowa, at Pella Humboldt College at Humboldt Iowa College at Grinnell Cornell College at Mount Vernon Burlington Institute, at Burlington Mount St. Joseph Academy at Dubuque and St. Francis Academy at Council Bluffs. The Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts is located at Ames. Normal schools and colleges are at Cedar Falls, Bloomfield Algona, Shenandoah Hamerton and other towns. There is a state college for the blind at Vinson The state institution for deaf-mutes is at Council Bluffs the reform school for boys is at Eldora and that for girls at Salem A school for feeble-minded children is established at Glenwood.

Constitution, Hi to y—The governor and other chief executive officers are chosen for the term of two years. The legislature consists of a Senate whose members are elected for 4 years, and of a House of Representatives, elected for 2 years. The state sends 11 members to the lower house of Congress.

Iowa was formerly the abode of portions of the Sac, Fox and Iowa tribes of Indians. The region was claimed by the French and was a part of the Louisiana purchase of 1803. It belonged successively to Missouri Michigan and Wisconsin territories and was organized as Iowa Territory in 1838. Iowa was admitted as a state into the Union in 1846. The French came to Dubuque in 1788 and wrought the lead-mines there but the settlement was not permanent, and no town or settled white population existed here before 1832. The admission of Iowa into the Union was followed by unexampled and uninterrupted prosperity.

Population—The population in 1838 was 22 859 in 1840, 43 112 in 1844, 97 469 in 1850 192 214 in 1860 274, 912, in 1870 1,194 020 in 1875 1 350 644 in 1880 1 634, 915 in 1890 1 911 896 in 1900 2,331 663. The foreign-born population in 1900 was 395 929 composed mainly of Germans and Scandinavians.

Iowa, a county in the southeast-central part of Iowa, has an area of 576 sq. m. It is intersected by the Iowa River and the North Fork of the English River. Capital Marengo. Pop. in 1890, 18 216 in 1900, 19 644.

Iowa, a county in the SW part of Wisconsin, has an area of 763 sq. m. It is bounded on the N by the Wisconsin River and is partly drained by the head-streams of the Pemuncion River. Lead, copper and zinc are found. Capital, Dodgeville. Pop. in 1890 22 117 in 1900 23 114.

Iowa Center, a post-village of Story co. Iowa, on Indian Creek, 27 miles NNE of Des Moines.

Iowa City, a post-village of Placer co. Cal. about 48 miles E. of Marysville. The banking point is Auburn. Pop. about 500.

Iowa City, the capital of Johnson co. Iowa, and the capital of the state from 1839 to 1936 is pleasantly situated on the E. bank of the Iowa River, 64 miles W by R. of Davenport, on the Chicago Rock Island and Pacific R. It is the seat of the Iowa State University organized in 1860 which has departments in arts, science, law, medicine, dentistry and pharmacy and over 1600 students, about one-fourth of whom are women. The Iowa City Academy is also located here. Iowa City has important meat-packing and manufacturing industries, foundries and machine-shops. Pop. in 1900 7987.

Iowa Falls, a banking post-town of Hardin co. Iowa, on the Iowa River and on the Illinois Central and other railroads, 40 miles E. of Fort Dodge. It has manufacturing of gasoline-engines store-fixtures etc. Pop. in 1900 2849.

Iowapark, a banking post-village of Wichita co. Tex. on the Fort Worth and Denver City R. 11 miles NW of Wichita Falls. Pop. about 750.

Iowa Point, a post-village of Doniphan co., Kan., on the Missouri River 31 miles N. of Atchison.

Iowaville, a post-hamlet of Sedgewick co. Kan.

Ipswich, a banking post-village of Fulton co. Ill., on the Burlington Route, 16 miles WSW of Lewis-town. Pop. in 1900, 748.

Ipek, a town of European Turkey. See Pazar.

Ipoly, ee'pol (Ger. Eipel, i'pol) a river of Hungary, joins the Danube, 16 miles below Graz, after a SSW course of about 120 miles.

Ipolyadg, ee'pol shag' a town of Hungary co. of Hont on the Ipoly. Pop. about 3250.

Ips, a town of Austria. See Yps.

Ipsala, ip'la la, a town of European Turkey in Rumania, on the Maritsa, at the influx of the river Ipsala.

Ipsambul, Nobis, Sas Abu-Sinazi.

Ipsara, or Esara (anc. Papra), an island belonging to Turkey in the Aegean Sea, 9 miles N.W. of Chios. Length and breadth 6 miles each.

Ipeus (Gr. Ipe), in ancient geography a town of Phrygia, where in 301 or 300 B.C. the army of Antigonus and his son Demetrius Poliorcetes was overwhelmed by Seleucus and Lysimachus.

Ipswich, a parliamentary municipal and county borough of England, within the territorial limits of the county of Suffolk on the left bank of the Glypping which here takes the name of Orwell 66 miles NE of London. Lat. of observatory 52° 0' 33" N. lon 1° 13' 57" E. In the older portion of the town near the river the streets are narrow and irregular and with their quaint decorated houses present a picturesque appearance. The newer section of the city contains many handsome buildings. The most interesting edifices are the old Sparrow's House (1567) in which Charles II. is said to have hidden after the battle of Worcester Neptunus Inn (1630) the town hall, in Italian Renaissance style, with a clock-tower the post-office, the corn exchange, the museum containing fine collections of Suffolk Cray fossils and British birds, and the church of St. Mary le Tower. The principal parks are Christchurch Park with two arboreta, and the promenade on the river-side near the docks. The industries of Ipswich comprise the manufacture of agricultural implements artificial manure, soap and paper, and brewing and ship-building. Ipswich returns 2 members to parliament. Cardinal Wolsey was born here. Of the college founded by him in the town only the gateway now remains. Pop. in 1601 11 366 in 1841 25 294, in 1891 57 360 in 1901 68 670.

Ipswich, a banking post-village and township (town) of Essex co. Mass. on the Ipswich River, 3 miles from its entrance into the ocean and 27 miles NNE of Boston on the Boston and Maine R. The river which here affords water power is crossed by several bridges. The town has manufactures of cottons and woollens, hosiery, boots, etc. Pop. in 1900 4538.

Ipswich, a banking post-village capital of Edmunds co. S. Dak. 26 miles W. of Aberdeen on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R. Pop. in 1900 797.

Ipswich, a town of Australia, in Queensland, 23 miles by rail W. of Brisbane. It is on the Bremer River. It has coal-mines. Pop. about 8000 (with suburbs in 1901 15 245).

Ipswich River, Mam traverses Essex co. and enters the Atlantic Ocean 10 miles SSE of Newburyport.

Iquique, ee-kee'ka a seaport town of Chile capital of the province of Tarapacá on the Pacific Ocean 40 miles W. of Tarapacá. It is opposite the island of Iquique (lat. 20° 12' S. lon 70° 14' W). Iquique exports much nitrate of soda (salt-petre) of which there are large deposits in the vicinity and also iodine and ore of silver. The city is well built, of a modern aspect, and extensively connected by railroads with the interior. In 1866 and in 1877 it suffered greatly from earthquakes. Pop. in 1900 42,440.

Iquitos, ee-kee'toos a town and river port of Peru, in the department of Loreto on the Upper Amazon 60 miles above the mouth of the Napo. It has a large floating dock, government iron-works, ship-yard, machine-shops saw-mills, etc. It has an extensive trade in rubber straw hats, etc. Pop. about 5000.

Ira, a post-village of Jasper co. Iowa, on the Chicago Great Western R. The banking point is Colfax. Pop. 100.

Ira, a post-village of Cayuga co. N. Y. in Ira township (town) 22 miles N. of Auburn. Pop. of the town in 1900 1668 of the village, about 150.

Ira, a township (town) of Rutland co. Vt. 7 miles SW of Rutland. Pop. in 1900, 350 of the village, about 150.

Irak-Ajemi, ee rak' aj shi me, an extensive region in the west-central portion of Persia, corresponding approximately to the ancient Media. The surface is an elevated table-land, traversed by several mountain-ranges. Ispahan is the great emporium of trade.

Irapuato, or Irā-puāto, a town of Mexico state and 21 miles S. by W. of Guanajuato, on the railroad connecting the city of Mexico with Guadalajara. Pop. about 20,000.

Irashburg, a post-village of Orleans co. Vt. on Irashburg township (town) on the Blank River 40 miles NW. of Montpelier. Pop. of the town in 1900 439.

Irawaddy, or Iravaddy (originally Eravati — i.e. the great river) one of the great rivers of southeastern Asia, rises by two branches on the southern face of the Nam-hui mountain NE of Assam in about lat. 26° 30' N lon 96° E. It flows generally S. traversing Burma, and enters the Indian Ocean (Bay of Bengal) by numerous mouths, E of Cape Negrais, in about lat. 16° N lon 95° E. Its length is estimated at 1200-1300 miles. Its principal affluents are the Khyendwin (Chindwin) and Bhamo rivers. In lat. 17° N it separates into numerous arms, which cover an area of about 20,000 sq. m. with a network of ramifications. The Bhamo and Bassein branches form the E. and W. boundaries of this delta, a region covered with rank forests and grass-jungles, interspersed with rice-grounds. The main stream, from the head of the delta to above Ava, varies from 1 to 4 miles in breadth, and is navigable for steamers of considerable size for 800 miles. Smaller craft are towed up to Bhamo, and there are considerable stretches available for navigation beyond. There are some rapids which impede navigation 20 miles above Bhamo, where the stream suddenly contracts from over a half-mile width to 500 feet. The mean discharge at the delta is about 600,000 cubic feet per second, which is quadrupled in periods of flood. The principal city on the river is the seaport of Bhamo (which is on the Bhamo branch, near its mouth) in Mandalay.

Irash, or Irash, a volcano of Costa Rica, near the city of Cartago. Elevation, about 11,200 feet.

Irbit, a built-up town of Russia, government of Perm 100 miles ENE. of Yakutsk, at the junction of the Irbit and Niva. It is noted for a large annual fair which lasts through the month of February and is attended by a great concourse of European and Asiatic merchants. It is connected by steamboat-lines with the principal towns of the Obi valley. Pop. in 1897, 20,000.

Irby, a post-village of Irwin co. Ga. The banking point in Tifton. Pop. 180.

Iredell, a county in the NW part of North Carolina has an area of 592 sq. m. It is bounded on the SW by the Catawba River and is drained by several small affluents of the Yadkin River. Capital, Statesville. Pop. in 1890 25,462 in 1900 29,064.

Iredell, a banking post-village of Boone co. Tex. on the Texas Central R. 74 miles NW of Waco. It is in a cotton region. Pop. about 570.

Ireg, or Ireg, a town of Hungary co. of Torna, 34 miles SSE. of Vasvár. Pop. about 3000.

Ireg, or Ireg, a town of Hungary in Slavonia, co. of Syrmia, 12 miles S. of Peterwardein. Pop. about 3000.

Ireland (Eire, Eire & ru, usually pronounced Erin L. Hibernia, or Erin, Erin) the more western of the two principal islands of which the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland is composed, between lat. 51° 25' and 56° 23' N and lon. 10° 29' and 10° 29' W. It has the Atlantic Ocean on all sides except the E, where it is separated from Great Britain by St. George's Channel, the Irish Sea, and the North Channel. Length, from Fair Head to Mission Head about 300 miles greatest breadth 170 miles. Area, including the adjacent islands, 32,605 sq. m. Pop. in 1841 8,196,000 in 1851 7,895,000 in 1861 5,797,000 in 1871 5,412,000 in 1881 5,175,000 in 1891 4,706,163 in 1901 4,459,775. The extraordinary decrease is the result of emigration, which assumed immense proportions after the great famine of 1846-47, once again upon the potato rot. The Irish and their descendants in the New World probably number about 10,000,000 the great bulk of whom are in the United States. A considerable fraction of the Canadian population is Irish. Australia has also had a large Irish immigration.

Ireland is divided into 4 provinces, 32 counties, and 2 independent cities (Dublin and Belfast), the populations and the areas of the provinces of which are given in the following table

* Inclusive of Dublin city (290,035)

† Inclusive of Belfast city (349,160)

Religious denominations Roman Catholics in 1891 3,349,745 in 1901 3,308,661 Protestants Episcopalian in 1891 600,830 in 1902 581,080; Presbyterians in 1891 445,687 in 1901 453,173 Methodists in 1901 62,006 Jews in 1901, 2896. The chief cities are Dublin the capital, with a population in 1901 of 457,068 (with the suburbs, 475,179) Belfast, 240,180 Cork 75,078 Londonderry 161,573 Limerick, 66,085 and Waterford, 67,187.

Physical Aspect—Ireland has a wavy continuous outline on the E. coast, but is indented by deep inlets and fjords on its other sides, with rock-bound coasts N and W. The surface is mostly level. Most of its mountains, on the Wicklow Mourne Donagall Mayo, Galway and Kerry mountains are in isolated groups towards the coasts and extremities of the island, surrounding a central plain comprising a large extent of bog land and traversed by a few low hill ranges. Carraun-tuail in the McGillicuddy Reeks, Kerry, is the highest summit, rising to 3414 feet. Granite, flanked by Silurian strata, forms the Wicklow range of mountains on the E. coast. The same rocks prevail in the Mourne mountains, and an extensive trap formation in Antrim is succeeded by clay-slate on the W. Granite again appears in the Galway mountains, and the Old Red Sandstone extensively prevails in Munster. The axes of most of the mountains are directed NE-SW but in the extreme S where the trends have been determined in post-Carboniferous times their course is nearly E-W. The great plain in the centre, 250 to 350 feet above the sea, is formed of Carboniferous limestone, and contains many bogs, lakes, and green meadows. In this limestone region are the coal basins, the output from which almost wholly of anthracite is not very large. In 1901 the production was only 105,029 tons. Besides coal Ireland possesses two other species of fuel viz lignite and turf (or peat). The former is found in dense strata encompassing the S. half of Lough Neagh; while the turf has been estimated to cover nearly one-seventh of the entire area. Copper and lead are now but minerals worked, and there are but few places where the mining of iron-ores is actively carried on. A small quantity of silver is found in the various lead-mines. Gold appears to have been at one time abundant, as is attested by the number of gold prehistoric ornaments, but the supply was apparently early exhausted. Ireland is rich in marbles (the black from Galway and Kilkenny the red from Cork and the green serpentine from Connemara) and has also many varieties of fine building sandstones. The total mineral product of 1901 was valued at £244,234.

The country is well watered. The principal rivers are the Shannon (with a length of about 200 miles) Lee, Barrow, Blackwater, Suir, Nore, Bann, Foyle, Boyne, Slaney, Liffey, Brandon, and Ebroe. Lakes—farmed lagoons—are very numerous, and the better known are Neagh, Erne, Allen, Corrib, Mask, Conn, Linn and Derg and the famed Loughs of Kesh, Fanny, and the Loughs of Strangford, Belfast, Foye and Swilly on the N and W coast are inlets of the sea. Other principal inlets are Dundrum, Carlingford, Dundalk and Dublin bays, and Wexford harbor on the E. Bantry, Duncannon, Dingle, Tralee, Galway, Clew, Blackhead, Killybegs, Sligo, Donegal and Loughs are bays, with the estuaries of the Shannon and Kenmare rivers on the W and Waterford, Dungarvan and Cork harbors on the E coast. Ireland is so much indented by the sea that no locality is over 60 miles from its shores and this, together with its exposure to the warm winds from the Atlantic Ocean conduces to the general mildness and moisture of its climate. The mean annual temperature ranges from 48° in the N to 52° in the S. At Dublin the average temperature of the coldest month is about 39° of the warmest, about 60°. The annual rainfall is here 29 inches, but the quantity is nearly doubled at many points of the W coast. Westerly winds prevail for nine months in the year. Plants that require artificial heat in England flourish here in the open air. The broad leaved myrtle grows luxuriantly in some southern counties and many plants (arbutus, myrica, etc.) of southern Europe flourish while Alpine plants of the extreme north of Europe are also found on some of the mountains. The generally green-covered surfaces, with their bright and luxuriant growths of grass, have suggested for the island the name of Emerald Isle. The animal life is less abundant than in England or Scotland, and it lacks a number of the more prominent mammalian types that belong to those regions as the roe-buck, polecat, brown hare, and various weasels and field-mice. The wolf and (Irish) elk were formerly a part of the Irish fauna. No serpent of any kind is found in the island at this time.

Agriculture, Fisheries, Manufactures.—Farms are generally very small. The great bulk of the land was confiscated by the government of James I. Cromwell, and William III. and bestowed on English proprietors, by whose descendants most of the Irish property is still possessed. Potatoes long formed the staple crop and food of the Irish peasantry till the failure of the potato crop in 1845-1846, and 1847 which led to a famine and to the emigration of many of the people. In 1903 the corn and green crops were grown on 2,376,847 acres. In 1901 the yield of wheat was 1,470,000 bushels of barley and oats, 6,634,000 bushels of oats, 81,000,000 bushels of potatoes, 3,373,000 tons and of turnips and swedes 4,884,000 tons. Many vessels are employed in the fisheries around the coasts, where herring, pilchard, cod, ling and hake are among the more plentiful kinds taken and in the estuaries where salmon and eels are abundant. In 1900 the number of persons engaged in the fisheries was 23,316 while the catch of 1901 was valued at £264,735. The leading manufacturing industry of Ireland is the making of linen. The chief seat of this industry is Ulster the city of Belfast being its great centre. There were, in 1898, 225 linen manufacturing employing 72,785 hands. Other textiles are also produced, and the manufacture of paper is important. Brewing and the distilling of whiskey are extensively carried on. Dublin porter is famous. In the north of Ireland many persons are employed in embroidering on muslin. Belfast is the centre of this manufacture, as well as of an extensive ship-building industry. Principal exports are live-stock, brown fish, whiskey, eggs, bacon and salt beef. The exports go almost entirely to Great Britain.

Communication.—All the principal towns are connected with one another by rail, and there is an extensive system of canals, by which the E. is placed in water-communication with the W and many of the lakes united with one another. There were, in 1902, 3268 miles of railroad in operation.

Education.—Among the higher educational institutions of Ireland are the University of Dublin founded in 1592; the Royal University of Ireland, an examining body founded in 1839 and the Catholic University (College) of Ireland, at Dublin. There are Queen's Colleges at Belfast, Cork, and Galway. Among the technical institutions the most noteworthy are the Royal College of Science, at Dublin, and the Metropolitan School of Art. Government, Churches.—Ireland has had no parliament of its own since 1800. It is represented in the British House of Lords by 28 temporal peers elected for life by the whole body of Irish peers. In the House of Commons it is represented by 103 members, 88 of whom are sent by the counties 16 by the cities and boroughs and 2 by the University of Dublin. The government is vested in the lord lieutenant (viceroy) assisted by the secretary for Ireland and a privy council nominated by the crown. In 1869 an act was passed by which from Jan. 1, 1871 the Protestant church in Ireland was disendowed and ceased to be a state establishment, all religious being placed on the same footing. The Episcopal church comprises 2 archbishoprics (Armagh and Dublin) and 11 bishoprics; the Roman Catholic church has 4 archbishoprics (Armagh, Cashel, Dublin, and Tuam) and 23 bishoprics. The Presbyterian church which in 1902 counted 569 congregations, has two colleges one purely theological at Belfast, and the other (Magee College) with theological library and scientific departments, at London derry. The Roman Catholics comprise about 70 per cent of the whole population. Down to near the middle of the nineteenth century the Irish language was the speech of the great mass of the rural population. At present it is spoken by only about one-eighth of the inhabitants, while the number of persons who cannot speak English is only about one per cent of the total population.

History.—The greater part of the Irish are descendants of the Celts who invaded the island in prehistoric times. Early in the fifth century Christianity was introduced by St. Patrick. For many centuries the country was the scene of perpetual warfare between the petty kings and their chiefs. The Northmen who invaded England did not spare Ireland. In 1014 a stop was finally put to their incursions. The English conquest of Ireland was begun in the reign of Henry II. In 1169 this king allowed a number of Norman adventurers to seize portions of the country and to hold them as fiefs of the English crown. The descendants of these Norman chieftains and of their followers were largely merged in the Celtic population. The Anglo-Norman element before long was arrayed, along with the native Irish in opposition to the English crown and for a time the authority of the English kings did not extend beyond a small so-called Pale. At length at the close of the fifteenth century Henry VII. succeeded in repressing the power of the Anglo-Irish lords and the Irish parliament was made dependent upon the English crown. In 1542 Henry VIII. assumed the title of King of Ireland. There were two great insurrections in the reign of Elizabeth at whose close Ireland was completely subdued. James I. settled large numbers of English and Scotch in Ulster. There was a great revolt in 1641-42 which was suppressed by Cromwell. There was a rebellion in favor of James II. in 1689-91 and an unsuccessful uprising took place in 1798. In 1801 the parliamentary union of Ireland with Great Britain was consummated. In 1829 the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act was passed. In 1843 the Irish repeal agitation under Daniel O'Connell was at its height, and in 1848 an insurrection took place but was speedily suppressed. Gladstone's first Land Act was passed in 1870 and the second in 1881. For the last 35 years a vigorous movement for Home Rule has been carried on.

It is surrounded by groves and orchards. In the seventeenth century Ispahan was one of the largest and most magnificent cities in the world. Now by the side of the monuments of its former splendor and of beautiful gardens are vast areas covered with ruins. The streets are for the most part narrow and twisting but there are spacious caravanserais and handsome bazars, the latter stretching away for miles, many of them in a state of decay. Famous among the bazars is the Bazaar of the Tailors. The public baths are numerous. A magnificent bridge, consisting of a double row of 34 arches, spans the river and gives access to the once flourishing suburb of Juffa. The chief square of Ispahan

In the Median Shah. Properly regarded as one of its great ornaments. Of the palaces the Tahabul-Simn or "Forty Pillars," built by Abbas the Great, is the finest. Of the scores of mosques the most magnificent is the Masjid Shah, situated on the Median Shah which is frequently stated to be the most sumptuous mosque of the Orient. The body of the edifice is surmounted by a vast dome, considered one of the finest specimens of Persian architecture. Connected with this mosque is a college of high rank. The suburb of Julfa was originally founded for a colony of Armenians whom Shah Abbas transplanted hither from Julfa-on-the-Aras, and who brought their weaving-industry with them. There are still many Armenians, and the city is the seat of an Armenian bishop. The artisans of Isfahan are esteemed the best in Persia; and its manufactures comprise all kinds of woven fabrics, gold- and silver- and leather wares, paper articles, fire-arms, sword-blades, glass, earthenware, and articles of luxury, which are sent by caravans to Bagdad, Herat, India, and elsewhere. Under the caliphs of Bagdad, Isfahan became the capital of the province of Irak and rose to be a place of great population, wealth, and trade. Shah Abbas made it the seat of his empire, and spared no cost in embellishing it with the most splendid edifices. In 1722 it was plundered by the Afghans; in 1723 it was retaken by Nadir Shah, since which time it has not been a royal residence. The number of inhabitants is about 80,000 which is only about one-tenth of the population which Isfahan once possessed.

Italy (one. Ita for Ita) a kingdom in the S of Europe, consisting of a peninsula, or continental portion, the islands of Sicily and Sardinia, and a number of small islands. The main-land extends from the extremity of Sicily from which it is separated by the narrow Strait of Messina, to the Alps, between lat. 36° 38' and 46° 40' N. and between lon. 8° 33' and 18° 33' E. It is bounded E by Austria and the Adriatic and Ionian seas (connected by the Strait of Otranto), SW and S by the Mediterranean (the area known as the Tyrrhenian and Ligurian seas) W by France, and N by Switzerland and Austria. Its natural confines are the Alps and the sea. Previous to 1859, Italy was divided into the kingdoms of Sardinia and the Two Sicilies (Naples and Sicily) the Pontifical States, or States of the Church, the Lombardo-Venetian provinces of the Austrian Empire, the grand-duchy of Tuscany the duchies of Parma and Modena, and two diminutive states—the principality of Monaco and the republic of San Marino. In 1859 Victor Emmanuel, king of Sardinia, obtained Lombardy, Parma, Modena, and part of the Pontifical States; Tuscany, the Marches, Umbria, and the Two Sicilies were annexed in 1860. In 1861 these were all united under the title of Kingdom of Italy. In 1866 Venetia was added and finally in 1870 the sequestration of Italy was completed by the annexation of Rome and its territory. The island of Corsica, whose population is Italian, belongs to France, and the Maltese Islands belong to Great Britain. Area, 110,000 sq. m.

The provinces are distributed into 16 compartimenti,—viz Piedmont, Liguria, Lombardy, Venetia, Emilia, Umbria, the Marches, Tuscany, Rome, the Abruzzi and Molise, Campania, Apulia, Basilicata, Calabria, Sicily and Sardinia. (See these titles.) The republic of San Marino and the principality of Monaco are Italian, though not connected with the kingdom politically and the same may be said of parts of Austria, Switzerland, and France.

The continental portion of the country is separated from the rest of Europe by the chain of the Alps, and its waters belong entirely to the basin of the Mediterranean Sea. The shores of the Adriatic are little indented, and on the N are low and bordered by marshes; those of the Ionian Sea are flat at the foot of the Gulf of Taranto only. The W shores of Italy are generally more elevated than the E, except in the Maremma (in Tuscany) and in the Pontine marshes. The chief islands are Sicily, Sardinia, Elba, and the Lipari Islands. The principal gulfs and bays are, in the Adriatic, those of Venice and Manfredonia; in the Ionian Sea, Taranto and Squillace; on the W coast, the bays of Santa Eufemia, Polignone, Salerno, Naples, and Gaeta, and the Gulf of Genoa.

Relief of the Land.—The great mass of the Alps forms the N and NW boundary with France, Switzerland, and Austria, and comprises parts of the Maritime, Cottian, Graian, Pennine, Lepontine, Rhaetian, Venetian and other groups, some of the loftiest summits of these are Mount Blanc (on the border of France) 15,782 feet, and Monte Rosa (on the Swiss frontier) 15,215 ft. being partially within Italian territory. Other lofty summits of these northern mountains are Gran Paradiso, 13,324 ft. Piz Bernina, 13,295 ft. Monte Viso 12,568 ft. Diavolada, 12,050 ft. and Adamello 11,080 ft. For the general characteristics of these mountains and for the passes that traverse them (Mont Cenis, Col di Tenda, Great and Little St. Bernard, Simplon, St. Gotthard, Splügen, Bernina, etc.) see the articles on ALPS and SWITZERLAND.

Southward and eastward of the great Alpine curve is the fertile bottom-land of Piedmont, Lombardy and Venetia, traversed by the Po and other rivers, and made up in principal part of sediment derived from the destruction and disintegration of the bounding mountains. Until a comparatively recent (geological) period this plain formed in part by subsidences constituted an arm of the Adriatic, extending westward. Its general slope is to the E and inward in the direction of the Po. The peninsular mass of Italy conforms closely in trend to its axial mountain-system the Apennines, which join on closely in the NW to the Alps and extend through virtually the whole length of the peninsula, passing out into Sicily and continued geographically as one of the outer ranges of the Atlas mountains in Tunis. Their loftiest summit is the Gran Sasso d'Italia (or Monte Corvo), 9583 feet. A number of other summits exceed 8000 ft. (See APPENDIX.) In Italy, as on the continent of Europe, do we to-day find active volcanism. Mount Vesuvius, on the Bay of Naples, about 4366 ft. with long periods of rest, may be said to have been continuously active since its first recorded great eruption in A.D. 79. Etna, on the island of Sicily 10,755 ft. is equally active. Stromboli, one of the Lipari Islands, is in almost perpetual turmoil. Numerous evidences of past volcanism are found in the Eugeanean Hills of the northern plain in some of the mountains of the Alban region near Rome, and in the Phlegrean fields of the Neapolitan region.

Rivers and Lakes.—The country is generally well watered, but except the Po, the rivers are small and frequently mere torrents, the chief of these are, in the basin of the Adriatic, the Tagliamento, Piave, Brenta, Adige, Po, Arona, Sangro and Ofanto in the basin of the Ionian Sea the Bradano and in that of the Mediterranean (Ligurian and Tyrrhenian seas) the Arno, Ombrone, Tiber, Garigliano, and Volturno. Italy has some of the largest mountain-lakes in Europe: the chief are Maggiore, Garda, and Lugano, only in part in Italy with Como and Iseo, which are entirely Italian among the S slopes of the Alps and on the W side of the Apennines the lakes of Trasimene, Bolsena, and Bracciano, mostly of classic interest, some of them renowned for the beauty of their scenery. On the low parts of the Adriatic coast are several extensive shallow lagoons formed by the sea, the largest being those of Venice and Comacine.

Climate.—From its position, form and configuration the country enjoys a varied and excellent climate, which permits the productions of the temperate and some of those of the torrid zone to mingle on its almost uniformly fertile surface. The exceptions to this are the pestiferous marshes, especially the Maremma in Tuscany, the theatre of a prolonged struggle between human industry and the malignity of the climate. Snow lies during the year on the Alps at elevations of 8500 feet and over only. The valley of the Po has a temperate climate, resembling that of the centre of France. Its lakes and portions of the lagoons of Venice are frozen in winter. In the region between lat. 38° and 46° 30' N or S of the line of Naples, snow falls on the slopes of the mountains only and the olive, orange, and citron ripen in the open air and in the S. of Calabria, in Sicily and the neighboring islands the climate permits the cultivation of tropical plants. Mean annual temperature Milan (lat. 45° 25') 56° Venice (lat. 45° 23') 54°, Florence (lat. 43° 43') 56°, Rome (lat. 41° 54') 60°, Naples (lat. 40° 52') 61°, Palermo (lat. 38° 8') 64°. Fair. The winters are mild, even in the N or on the plains of Lombardy and S. of the Apennines snow rarely falls. Exceptionally however: it has been seen at Naples and also in Sicily. One of the most favored climatic regions of Italy is the Riviera, bordering on the Gulf of Genoa. The prevailing winds of Italy are W and SW during which the air is pure and healthy, but the E portion of the country is frequently visited by the hot, pestiferous winds of Africa, the Sirocco.

and Libiola, during which vegetation is arrested and the human frame becomes languid and feeble. In the south the prevailing summer winds are from the N. The average annual rainfall for northern Italy is about 40 inches (rising to 61 inches at Genoa) for central Italy 32 inches and for the south, about 27 inches. The highest fall, about 160 inches, has been registered at Tofino, in the extreme NE. at the foot of the Alps. Fever prevails in marshy districts. It is asserted that one-sixth of the population of Italy suffers from malaria.

Natural Products, etc.—Italy is rich in mineral products, the metals that are worked comprising iron, copper, also, lead, and mercury. Some silver, gold, antimony and man-ganese are also obtained. There were in 1901 719 productive mines of sulphur whose combined product valued at 43,979 718 lire, was 3,736,916 metric tons. The quarries of Italy employed 57,000 men and yielded building sculptural and decorative stone valued at 22,000,000 lire (more than one-half of which was marble). The Apennines supply the beautiful marbles of Carrara. Borax, salt, nitre, alum, alabaster, lava, and other volcanic products are abundant. There are many mineral and gaseous springs. The vegetable productions of Italy are extremely varied. The Alps afford excellent pasture and forests with a great variety of timber. The chief products of the soil are corn in Sicily and in the plain of the Po (which latter also possesses some of the most extensive rice-fields in Europe) wheat, various fruits, and the vine. The chestnut forms an important article of food in the Apennines. The vine, olive, and other fruit-trees yield abundant crops and in the S cotton, the sugar-cane, orange, lemon, and figs are cultivated. The date and some other palms grow in favorable situations. The culture of the mulberry and the rearing of the silk-worm form an important branch of industry. The flora generally is typically Mediterranean with numerous evergreens (evergreen-oak, pine, cypress) especially fitted to resist drought, and with the myrtle and olive as among the most distinctive forms. The chestnut forests of Sicily at elevations of between 2000 and 3000 feet (where they are succeeded by the beech) are particularly impressive. The fauna resembles that of the rest of Europe in similar latitudes but is generally deficient in the higher types, many of which have been exterminated. Lizards are very numerous, as are likewise the land-snails. Many of the African and north European birds pass as migrants. Fish are abundant in the rivers. The tunny anchovy and marine-fisheries in the Mediterranean are very productive. The coasts of Sicily furnish sponges and corals. Cattle are reared to a considerable extent in the N and goats and swine in the S. Among the domestic animals is the buffalo.

Manufactures, Transportation, etc.—Manufactures comprise silk (chiefly in Lombardy and Piedmont) woollens, gauze, porcelain, artificial flowers, hats, paper, parchment, musical instruments, leather, gold- and silver-ware, jewelry (silversmith-work), mosaics, ivory-carvings, iron, steel, marble and alabaster-products, etc. In 1895 there were engaged in the rearing of silk-worms 550,043 persons and there were 172,000 skilled workmen (mostly women and children) employed in the manufacture and treatment of silk. As a wide-producing country Italy stands only second to France, her vineyards covering about 8800 sq. m. Parmesan cheese and macaroni are noted products. Italy had, in 1901 9852 miles of railway in operation. The mercantile marine comprises numerous steamers and sailing vessels and Italian merchants are extensively engaged both in Mediterranean and oceanic commerce. At the close of 1900 the number of vessels engaged in the fisheries was 23,378, with an aggregate tonnage of 66,645. The naval force consists of battleships, armored cruisers, torpedo-boats, torpedo gun-boats, and torpedo-destroyers, the first two classes comprising about 40 vessels. The strength of the army on the peace footing is about 285,000 enlisted men, with more than 13,700 officers.

Religion, Education, etc.—Throughout the whole of Italy Italian, in different dialects, is almost universally the language of the country. It is spoken in its greatest purity in Tuscany. The Roman Catholic religion is the religion of the state and is professed by almost the entire population. The pontifical hierarchy comprises 49 archbishops and 220 bishops, besides 4 cardinal bishops. The Pope, who continues to enjoy the privileges of a sovereign, is the supreme head of the church. In the installation of archbishops and bishops the royal assent is required. The government has realized enormous sums through the confiscation of the property of monastic institutions. A great part of the funds has been applied to the maintenance of the church and the purposes of education. The Italian government has done much to foster education but notwithstanding that very great progress has been made, a very large proportion of the people are unable to read or write. There are 21 universities, of which 17 are sustained by the general government. Nine universities are of the first class, viz., those of Bologna, Genoa, Naples, Padua, Palermo, Pavia, Pisa, Rome, and Turin, and 8 of the second class viz., those of Cagliari, Catania, Macerata, Messina, Modena, Parma, Sassari and Siena. Cambrino, Ferrara, Perugia, and Urbino have universities supported by provincial governments. The University of Naples is the largest, having over 6000 students. The University of Bologna is the most ancient. There are numerous public schools, gymnasia, and technical schools. The Accademia dei Lincei, whose seat is at Rome, and the Accademia della Crusca, of Florence, are among the foremost learned societies in the world. Italy is surpassed by few countries in the number of books annually issuing from the press. The history of European art since the thirteenth century is in great measure the history of art in Italy.

Government, etc.—The government of Italy is a constitutional hereditary monarchy. The reigning house is that of Savoy. The parliament consists of a senate and chamber of deputies. The senate, whose members sit for life, is composed of nobles nominated by the king out of 21 categories,—ecclesiastical officers of state, deputies who have served through 3 legislative terms, persons who have rendered great services to their country, persons paying taxes above a certain amount, etc. In addition the princes royal have a seat in this body whose members number about 400. The members of the chamber of deputies 508 in number are elected for a term of 5 years. All male citizens above the age of 21 years who are able to read and write and who pay taxes to the amount of 4 dollars (the payment of a certain amount of rent or a substitute) are entitled to the suffrage. The capital is Rome. The foreign possessions of Italy consist of Eritrea and Italian Somaliland, whose combined population is less than 1,000,000.

Italy had in 1901 3 towns whose population exceeded 400,000. Naples 583,540. Milan 401,400. Rome 462,783. History.—At the dawn of history the Italian peninsula was inhabited by a number of tribes designated as Italic (belonging mainly to the Latin, Oscan, Umbrian and Sabellic groups) and by the Etruscans. Along the coasts of the southern portion were numerous Greek colonies (Rhegium, Croton, Sybaris, Tarantum, Locri, etc.) whence this part of Italy received the name of Magna Græcia. The region to the north of the peninsula was occupied by Gauls (whence the Roman name of Cisalpine Gaul). By 265 B.C. Rome was mistress of the peninsula part of Italy whose inhabitants were gradually absorbed into a nation of Latin speech. Cisalpine Gaul was subjugated by Rome in 220-222 B.C. The Roman Empire was extinguished by the German invasions, and disappeared in A.D. 476. Soon after an Ostrogothic kingdom was established in Italy which was conquered by the Byzantines in 536-53. The Lombards founded their Italian kingdom in 568-73, and enlarged their state on the ruins of the Byzantine dominion. A papal realm came into existence in the eighth century. In 774 Charlemagne the Great king of the Franks, put an end to the Lombard kingdom and crowned himself king of Italy. This Italian kingdom which embraced the northern half of the country was ruled by his descendants until 961 when Otto the Great king of Germany placed the Lombard crown on his head. His coronation by the pope as emperor in 962 inaugurated the H.R. Roman Empire of the German Nation within which realm the lands of northern and central Italy or portions of them were included throughout the greater part of the Middle Ages. The Byzantine dominions in the S were conquered in the eleventh century by the Normans, who wrested Sicily from the Saracens. In 1194 the German dynasty of the Hohenstaufens (which ruled the Holy Roman Empire for a century) came into possession of the kingdom founded by the Normans (the Two Sicilies). They were dispossessed in 1266 by the French House of Anjou which however succeeded only in retaining hold of the Sicilian dominions on the main-land (the kingdom of Naples) while Sicily itself passed under Aragonese rule, soon to become for a time independent.

During the early centuries of the Middle Ages the republic of Venice from slender beginnings, grew up into a state which developed untrammelled by the yoke imposed upon the neighboring regions by the German emperors. By the twelfth century it had become very powerful. At this time there were two other great maritime republics, Pisa and Genoa. At the close of the thirteenth century Genoa destroyed the power of Pisa, and a century later Venice came off victorious in her long struggle with Genoa. In the twelfth century the numerous city republics of northern Italy began to play an important rôle. In 1167 the Lombard League was formed against the German emperors, whose dominion in Italy waned away completely in the course of the thirteenth century. Milan and Florence outstripped the other republics of the interior. Florence led Europe in the great revival of the arts and letters. Dante shed lustre upon her at the beginning of the fourteenth century and Giotto was his contemporary. Two centuries later Italian art reached its culmination in Raphael and Michelangelo.

Before the close of the Middle Ages most of the city republics had fallen into the hands of petty tyrants, and the smaller ones had been swallowed up by their neighbors. At the close of the fifteenth century Italy consisted mainly of Piedmont (belonging to the dukes of Savoy), Genoa, the duchy of Milan, Mantua, Venetia, Florence, the Papal States and the kingdom of Naples. Sicily had passed into the possession of Aragon, which also ruled Sardinia. In 1502 the Spaniards became masters of the kingdom of Naples, and before the middle of the century Milan passed under Spanish rule. The duchy of Parma was created in 1545. In 1550 the Florentine dominions were erected into the grand-duchy of Tuscany. In 1513-14 Lombardy and Naples passed under the rule of Austria. In 1796 Sardinia passed to Savoy whose duke assumed the title of King of Sardinia. In 1734-35 the Bourbon dynasty was established on the throne of the Two Sicilies. The period of the Napoleonic wars wrought great changes in the political complexion of Italy. At their close the former political divisions and dynasties were in a great measure restored. The republics of Venice and Genoa had, however, disappeared, the Venetian dominions having passed to Austria and Genoa being annexed to Sardinia. In 1859-70 the liberation and unification of Italy were achieved (see beginning of article).

Janina, yān nā or yān nā, Janina, or Yanina, a town of European Turkey capital of a vilayet of its own name, situated in the southern part of Albania (Epirus) near the Greek frontier on the Little Lake of Janina (once Pamboctis) 44 miles N by W of Arta. It is a busy commercial, and industrial town although its trade has greatly declined. A hundred years ago, when the strenuous but sanguinary Ali Pasha (the Lion of Janina) lorded it over the city and the surrounding country Janina had some notable architectural features but the lofty Iron Castle is now dissipated and the fort on the lake a ruin and the streets present a mean appearance in spite of the many mosques and churches. The main features include gold woven and silk stuffs and morocco. There are several foreign consulates. The population is estimated at about 25,000 of whom more than one half are Greeks in whose hands is most of the trade and industry. The bulk of the remainder are Mohammedans, mainly Albanians and there are many Jews. Janina rose to be an important place in the latter part of the Middle Ages.

Japan, called Nippon, nip pon Nippon, or Dai (dai) Nippon, by the Japanese, an insular empire of Asia, composed of the four large islands of Japan proper, Honshu (Honshin or Nippon), Kiu-shiu, Shikoku and Yezo, together with Formosa, the southern half of Saghalin the Kuril Lis-kia (Loo-choo) Bonin, and other islands. Area, 174,000 sq. m. of which 13,450 sq. m. belong to the island of Formosa. Pop. in Jan. 1904, 49,512,437 of which number 35,450,507 were on the main island (Honshu) 8,187,767 on Shikoku, 1,260,810 on Kiu-shiu 843,717 on Yezo, and 2,899,558 on the island of Formosa.

The islands of Japan proper are included between the parallels of 30° and 45° 30' N lat. and are disposed in crescentic form between the meridians (approx.) of 120° and 146° E lon. Including its dependencies, the empire stretches on the N to beyond lat. 50° and on the S to lat. 22°, thus having a linear extent of upward of 3000 miles. All the main islands have irregular contours and are deeply indented with bays and harbors. The interior is ruggedly mountainous, various chains of granite and other rocks, associated with a large number of volcanic cones, following axially in the line of the islands and sending off spurs and contraforts to the line of coast, where they abruptly terminate in steep cliffs. Most of the mountains are densely wooded and their included valleys highly cultivated. The loftiest summit of the empire is the non-volcanic Mount Morrison in Formosa (15,565 feet). The most interesting of the Japanese mountains are the volcanoes among which the famous Fujiyama, SW of Tokyo, snow-covered and strikingly symmetrical in outline, holds first position (12,300 ft.). Other noted volcanic summits are Ontake, Tateyama (both about 10,000 ft. in height), Asamayama (about 8200 ft. in violent eruption in 1783), Aso-san (about 6600 ft. whose crater 12 miles in diameter is thought to be, with one exception the largest in the world) and Bandai-san which underwent a paroxysmal eruption in 1888. Most of the volcanoes are extinct or is a condition of dormancy. There are, however, numerous thermal springs and other indications of recent activity. Earthquakes are exceedingly numerous—seemingly more so than in any other country in which the phenomena have been studied—and some of them have been very destructive and productive (as those recurring in the Kiu and Owari provinces in 1891-92) of great topographic changes.

The rivers of Japan are numerous and generally wide at their mouths, but their courses are short and they are not navigable for many miles inland. Many of them are of a torrential character and spread destruction along their banks. Of the lakes, the principal is Biwa, in the S of Honshu, regarded by the Japanese with superstitious reverence and having shores of striking beauty. It is about 46 miles in length.

Climate and Productions.—The climate of the Japanese Empire partakes of tropical characteristics in the S and of those of the subarctic tract in the N, and is in the central zone considerably influenced by the Japanese Gulf Stream, the Kuro-siwo. In the main islands, over all of which snow falls in greater or less quantity during the winter, the hottest period is usually from the middle of July to the middle of September. The mean annual temperature of Tokyo is 57° with an absolute maximum of 98° and a minimum of 15°. Japan enjoys an abundant rain fall, the mean yearly precipitation (at Tokyo) being 59 inches. Destructive revolving storms, or typhoons, sometimes accompany the rains at the end of the summer heat, or in September. Along the coast of Yezo the sea at times freezes and the land is snow-bound for several months.

The flora of Japan is of marked luxuriance, and combines elements drawn from the tropics as well as from the temperate regions. Among the former are the bamboo and the sago-palm, among the latter some of the most conspicuous are the pine, elm, maple, chestnut, beech, and oak. A variety of cedar the Cryptomeria japonica, is one of the largest and most picturesque trees of the land, bordering the ancient highways and the approaches to famous shrines. Other trees are the ginkgo or Schubertia, wax-tree (a species of Rhus) camphor-laurel, paper mulberry, and the lacquer tree. Many of the commoner fruits of the north such as the apple, pear, peach, and fig are cultivated, but the fruits are generally of an inferior quality, the Japanese orange and persimmon form however an exception to this rule. The cherry and plum are cultivated for their blossoms, and it is difficult to conceive of a landscape of greater beauty than that which is adorned by these magnificent products of the Japanese flora. The tea-plant, which furnishes one of the staples of the Japanese soil, thrives best in the central regions. The staple cereals are rice, barley and rye. The production of rice in 1901 was about 226,000,000 bushels of barley, about 43,000,000 bushels of rye, about 34,000,000 bushels of wheat, and about 20,000,000 bushels. In 1900 the product of the tea cultivated was 73,000,000 pounds, and of sugar, 170,000,000 pounds.

The fauna of Japan is essentially that of south-temperate Asia, with certain well marked American types and an infusion of tropical elements (monkey) in the south. Among the better known quadrupeds may be mentioned the bear, badger, deer, fox, badger, squirrel and hare, the domesticated animals, some of them introduced only at a very recent period include the horse, cow, buffalo, sheep, pig and dog, the animals of draught being the ox and buffalo. Japanese song birds (lark and a species of nightingale) are few in species. Fish abound everywhere on the coast, the salmon and trout are numerous in some of the fresh-water streams.

The mineral productions of Japan are chiefly gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, coal, antimony, and sulphur, the yield of which in most cases is not very considerable. The product of copper in 1899 was 60,000,000 pounds, of iron, 54,000,000 pounds, and of antimony 2,000,000 pounds. Coal was mined to the extent of 0,708,763 tons, the richest coal-fields being those of the islands of Honshu and Yezo.

Manufactures, Transportation.—In its manufactures Japan has taken a significant place among the nations of the world. Its people have long been famous for their handiwork in the making of sword blades and other metallic goods, fine bronzes, silk and cotton fabrics, porcelain, lacquered and japanned wares and paper. Silk, cotton, and other textiles were manufactured in 1900 to the value of about $25,000,000. There were in the land, in 1900, 59 cotton-spinning mills employing 16,154 men and 54,124 women. The first line of railway was opened in 1872, connecting Yokohama with the capital 18 miles. The mileage of railroads in 1900-01 was 1010 of state railroads and 2005 of railroads owned by private companies, the two together carrying 118,000,000 passengers. Where railroads have not yet been introduced, the horikaba, or high wheeled cart, patterned after a vehicle introduced from the United States, and drawn by natives is the chief form of conveyance. The length of telegraph lines was, in 1901-02, 6377 miles of telephons lines, in 1899 1562 miles.

Education.—Elementary education is compulsory. The schools have all the grades from the elementary to the university. In 1900-01 there were 20,837 elementary schools. There are two universities that of Tokyo with colleges of law, medicine, literature, science, engineering and agriculture and that of Kyoto, with colleges of law, medicine, science, and engineering. Both of these institutions as well as the bulk of other schools are supported by the government. The former possesses a library of about 350,000 volumes. The number of books published in 1900 was 18,751 and of periodicals 944.

Government, Defence.—The government of Japan is a constitutional monarchy modelled after the pattern of western nations. The emperor who bears the title of Mikado exercises the executive power with the advice of the cabinet ministers. There is also a privy council. The imperial diet, or parliament, is composed of a house of peers (numbering about 300 members) and a house of representatives, whose membership is fixed at 300. The house of peers consists of princes of the imperial family, nobles, persons nominated by the emperor as a reward for meritorious services to the state, and representatives of the largest tax payers. Suffrage is limited by a tax-payment qualification. The emperor may declare war, make peace, and conclude treaties. The cabinet has 9 portfolios, those of foreign affairs, finance, interior, justice, war, navy, public instruction, agriculture and commerce, and communications. The capital of Japan is Tokyo. Until recently the actual seat of government was at Kyoto. The total effective force of the Japanese army including the reserves, landwehr, etc., at the time of the outbreak of the war with Russia was about 325,000 men, the personnel of the navy was 35,000 men, including officers. The effective force of the Japanese fleet consisted of 98 vessels, of which 6 were battle-ships, 8 armored cruisers, 47 modern torpedo-boats and 20 torpedo-boat destroyers. Ex-tempera docks, arsenals, and barracks have been located at different ports and there are important ship-building works at Nagasaki.

Commerce.—In 1901 the merchant navy of Japan (excluding Formosa) consisted of 1321 steamers of European type, 3850 sailing vessels of European type, and 911 native craft of various kinds. The following are some of the leading articles of export to foreign countries, rice, other food-stuffs, tea, silk (raw and manufactured, valued in 1901 at 109,000,000 yen, the yen being equivalent to about 40 cents), cotton yarn (21,455,000 yen), textiles, copper (13,904,000 yen), drugs and paints, watches (7,822,000 yen), floor mats, and coal. The largest imports are those of rice, sugar (23,500,000 yen), wool and woollens, cotton and cotton-seed (10,650,000 yen), cotton manufactures from steel and manufactures of these metals (30,008,000 yen), fire-arms, machines, petroleum, etc.

In 1854 a general convention of peace and amity (the Perry Treaty) was signed between Japan and the United States, by which the ports of Shimoda and Hakodadi were opened to the ships of the latter. This was the beginning of a new era in the history of Japan, the policy of non-intercourse with the western world being gradually abandoned. Treaties were successively concluded with nearly all the Christian nations. The extra-territorial rights of foreigners in Japan have been abrogated, such aliens having the same privileges and obligations as the citizens of that country except that they may not own land in Japan; Japanese subjects in foreign countries have as full rights as any other aliens, and Japan is now entirely open to foreign residents, trade, and industry. The chief ports opened for foreign trade are Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki, Moji, Shimoda, Hakodadi, and Niigata. An Imperial Commercial Museum for the exhibition of export and import products and the furtherance of trade has been established. A gold standard went into effect in 1897 with beneficial results and there is a national banking system.

Political Divisions, Religion, etc.—Japan is divided (excepting Yom the Kuril Islands, and Formosa) into 3 fu (Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka) and 43 ken, or prefectures. The subdivisions are gun (county), shi (municipality), cho (small town), and son (village). The system of justice is based on modern methods of jurisprudence. All religions are recognized and there is no state religion or any state support. The ancient religion is Shintoism with its numberless deities (some of them human beings) and its worship of nature. The Shinto temples and shrines, scattered all over the empire, number nearly 200,000. The majority of the population are adherents of Buddhism. The educated classes are largely followers of Confucius. There are many thousands of Christians. The Japanese are of the Mongolian race. Their language is altogether different from that of the Chinese. In the island of Yezo dwell the Ainu (Ainu), a small tribe of mountain ethnic affinities who appear anciently to have been spread over a great part of Japan. Ainu blood is supposed to be largely mingled with the Mongolian blood in the veins of the Japanese people.

History.—The Japanese records place the foundation of the reigning dynasty about the year 600 B.C. In the sixth century A.D. Buddhism entered the country where it was received with such favor that in the following century it was proclaimed the national religion. In the course of the Middle Ages the supreme civil power became gradually divorced from the military power. The authority of the head of the state, the mikado, was reduced to a shadow although the traditional honor still clung to his position. The virtual ruler was the shogun who held the military power in his hands. The journeys of Kublucan and Marco Polo to eastern Asia in the thirteenth century brought a knowledge of Japan to the peoples of Europe. In the sixteenth century the Portuguese came to Japan, entering into trade relations, and the Jesuits made numerous converts to Christianity. Before long, however, there was a violent revolution against Christianity. The Portuguese were expelled, after which for a brief period, the Dutch were allowed to have intercourse with Japan. Then for more than two centuries the empire was closed to the western world until in 1854 Commodore Perry succeeded in inducing the government to enter into relations with the United States. In 1867-68 occurred the great revolution in which the shogunate was overthrown and the supreme power restored to the mikado. With the shogunate the system of landed feudal nobility which had prevailed under it, that of the daimyo, came to an end. Japan now went through a process of transformation, regeneration and material and intellectual progress unparalleled in history. The nation embraced the civilization of the West. A great military and naval power on modern lines was built up. In 1889 parliamentary government was instituted. In 1894-95 recreated Japan gave evidence of her strength in a victorious struggle with China. As a result of the war Japan acquired by cession Formosa and the Pescadore Islands. In the Boxer troubles in China, in 1900 her troops took a conspicuous part, in association with the allies, in quelling the insurrection and establishing peace. The years 1904-5 witnessed a war between Japan and Russia, growing out of the encroachments of the latter in Manchuria. In this struggle which was virtually concluded by the treaty of Portsmouth Sept. 5 1905, Japan asserted her position as a military and naval power able to cope with almost any in the world. She forced Russia to withdraw from Manchuria acquired possession of Port Arthur received one-half of Saghalien and was given a free hand in the control of the affairs of Korea. Among the larger cities of the empire are Tokyo, with a population in 1904 of 1,819,655. Osaka, Kyoto, Nagoya, Kobe, Yokohama, Hiroshima, and Nagasaki.

Java, já-ra (Sanskrit, Java millet) an island in the Malay Archipelago the principal seat of the Dutch power in the East, and after Sumatra and Borneo, the largest in the Sundra group. It is bounded N by the Java Sea and S by the Indian Ocean separated W by the Strait of Sunda from Sumatra, and E by that of Ball from the island of Ball. Lat. 5° 52' S. 51° 51' E. Lon. 105° 10' 114° 30' E. Its shape somewhat resembles a parallelogram, the greater axis lying E and W with a slight inclination N at the W end. The island is 830 miles long by 35 to 120 miles broad. Area, including of the adjoining island of Madura (which has about 2000 sq. m.) 50,554 sq. m.

Physical Aspects—The S coast of Java presents a continuous front of crags and rocks forming the outer edge of an extremely mountainous country. The N is flat and low and covered in many places with mangrove swamps. The principal capes and bays along its coast are Java Head at the entrance of the Strait of Sunda from the Indian Ocean, Cape St. Nicholas where that strait opens into the Java Sea, Cape Pankas at the W and Cape Semelang at the E, entrance of the Strait of Madura, capes East and South at the SE extremity of Java, Wyneop's Welcome and Pepper bays at the N end of the island, Bantam and Batavia bays, on the NW, Bembang on the N and along the S coast from W to P. Lonsjeng, Pahlissa, Langol Sambong, Segara-Wadi, Dampar and Gradjegan bays. The chief harbors are those of Batavia and Surabaya, on the N and that of Chilatjap, formed by the small island of Kembangan, on the S.

The island is traversed throughout its whole length by chains of mountains, which are thickly set with volcanoes, active and extinct, varying generally from 6000 to 8000 feet in height, some of them rising to over 12,000 ft. form landmarks to the navigator. About one-half of the 40 or more volcanic peaks are active. Among the most noted summits are Semeru, in the E group of mountains, constituting the culminating point of the island, 12,100 ft. Tengger also in the E group 8930 ft. having a crater about 8 miles in diameter. Galunggung in the western mountains, famous for its destructive eruptions in 1822. Pundaryang about 8000 ft. Gunter and Slamet (11,240 ft.).

The mountains are intersected by large and beautiful valleys watered by rivers and torrents and covered, for the most part with thick forests. A multitude of rivers flow from the N and S sides of the mountains affording supplies to innumerable artificial water-courses used in irrigation. These streams are generally rapid shallow and encumbered with sand banks. The only rivers navigable for vessels to any distance inland are the Solo, Kediri, Tji-manuk and Tji-tum, the others are only suitable for canoes or for floating timber. The formation of the island is essentially volcanic but there are areas of Tertiary and Quaternary (basaltic) sediments. Granite is found in some parts of the N but the plutonic rocks are limited. The island has an extensively wrought metallic deposits. The Bantam coal mines yield lignite, naptha and asphalt abundant in various localities and the mines of Kewu SE of Samarang yield a large supply of salt. Warm medicinal waters are very plentiful. The volcanoes when in an active state are remarkable for the quantity of sulphur and sulphurous vapors they discharge. An extinct volcano near Batavia called Geora Upas, or the Vale of Poison about half a mile around is held in horror by the natives on account of its (assumed) deadly atmosphere of carbonic vapors.

Climate—Java was formerly considered very unhealthy but with the exception of a few marshy districts on the N coast and some parts on the S the climate is an salubrious one that of most intertropical countries and the more elevated regions are even remarkably healthy. In the plains the temperature during the day is from 85° to 94° and during the night from 73° to 80°. At Batavia (one of the unhealthy places) the daily range of the thermometer is from about 70° to 90°. The average annual rainfall there is about 75 inches (the amount varying greatly from year to year) which is increased to 185 inches on the hill-station of Buitenzorg. Over a large part of the island (not, however in the west where Batavia is situated) there is a dry season from April to October, while the rest of the year is a season of rains. Thunder-storms are common but hurricanes are rare. The island is subject to earthquake shocks.

Animals—The mammalian types of Java are numerous. Though so close to Sumatra and the Malay Peninsula, neither the elephant nor the tapir is found in the island but in the N part the one-horned rhinoceros is not uncommon and in numerous districts the tiger leopard and tiger-cat keep the inhabitants in alarm by their depredations. The Indrius wild dog deer and several species of ape form part of the larger game. The lemur inspires the inhabitants with superstitious fear by their mysterious nocturnal habits and this island may be considered the native seat of the largest bats some of which measure several feet across the wings. Civets are common and supply a perfume of which the Javanese are passionately fond. The wild ox (Bos sondaica) a beautiful and graceful animal which has been found unobtainable abundance in the woods and the buffalo date to have been brought from continental Asia in the twelfth century by the same prince to whom tradition assigns the introduction of the rice-plant, is the chief animal used in agricultural labor. There are about 2,700,000 buffaloes in the land, and perhaps a smaller number of cows and oxen. Among the birds of Java may be mentioned the peacock, jungle-fowl, partridges, pigeons, fruit-doves, etc.

Vegetation—Agriculture etc.—Java possesses a soil of astonishing fertility and a vegetation unsurpassed in its luxuriance. Behind the coast-line which is fringed with coconut-trees the ground rises gently to the foot of the mountain-chain and is everywhere cultivated. Javanese villages of bamboo houses, surrounded with hedges of fruit-trees, the banana, and bamboo, contrast agreeably with the vast fields of rice, artificially watered and yielding often three harvests annually. The bases of the mountains are covered with vast forests of different species of the Ag-troo or rubber. At an elevation of 5000 feet are heavy growths of Podocarpus neriifolius (a tree allied to the yew and furnishing the best timber in Java), the Damar pine, rhododendrons, and the Dipteris or two-leaved fern. Lauralis of numerous species, obtusata, calos, melastomus eugeniae, magnolias, myrtles, numerous orchids etc., grow still higher up the mountains. At about 7000 feet the vegetation changes its aspect. Many plants of European type (various heaths the raspberry, honeysuckle, St. John's wort, violet, buttercup, cowslip, guelder-rose, cypraea) appear on the higher slopes. The famed poison tree, the Upas (Ashwaria uariorum) is a noted Javanese plant. Forests of teak cover very extended areas.

Rice forms the staple food of the natives and is raised in enormous quantities. Coffee, sugar tobacco, wax, indigo, copra, pepper and cinchona are among the staples of the island. The cultivation of nutmeg, cloves, cinnamon, pimento, rubber and cacao is carried on with success. The population is almost wholly agricultural. There are but few large towns. Most of the soil is claimed as government property. A system of compulsory labor exists to some extent, the peasants being obliged to give a certain amount of their labor to the government or private land owners in the cultivation of coffee. The yield of sugar in 1899 was 90 000 tons in 1900 710 000 tons. The production of coffee in 1899 was 104,505 033 pounds of tea, 8,636,371 kilograms of tobacco, 21 737 195 kilograms of cinchona, 5 669 695 kilograms of indigo 716,556 kilograms. The chief articles of export include sugar, copra, coffee, rice, tobacco, tea, tannin, cinchona, tin, leaf hives, pepper and cacao, the quantity of the first being in 1901 725,110 000 kilograms. The great bulk of the foreign trade is carried on through the ports of Batavia, Samarang and Surabaya, and is chiefly in the hands of the Dutch and Chinese. There were about 1200 miles of railway in operation in 1901.

Government—Java is administered by the governor-general of the Dutch East Indies, whose seat of government is at Batavia. He is assisted by a council of 5 members and by the directors of the various departments of the administration. The island (together with Madura) is divided into 17 districts called residenzen. At the head of each is a resident, under whom are assistant residents and controllers. The lower administrative offices are filled by natives. In each residency a regent, selected by the government from the old nobility is appointed who is the intermediary between the native officials and the Dutch. The tanakas of Jokjakarta and Surakarta have been allowed to continue their existence the kepatihan however retaining not a shadow of power. The administration of law as far as natives are concerned, is in accordance with the old national customs. Among the educational or scientific institutions of the island is the famous botanical garden of Buitenzorg which surpasses all the botanical gardens of the world in the wealth and variety of its tropical productions.

Inhabitant Religion—The Javanese belong to the Malay family. They consist of the Javanese proper the Sundanese, and the Madurese, speaking distinct dialects of the Javanese language. The Javanese early developed a high degree of civilization through commercial contact with India, and in the Middle Ages an extensive Javanese literature came into existence. The ancient literary language is the Kawi, which is to the modern dialects of Java what Sanskrit is to the modern Hindu tongues of India. There is a large infusion of Sanskrit words in Kawi as well as in modern Javanese. The art of India was transplanted to Java, which has splendid architectural remains, Hindu and Buddhist. The vast temple of Borobudur is the most imposing monument of Buddhist architecture in the world. Hinduism and Buddhism gave way at the close of the Middle Ages to Islam. The great mass of the Javanese profess Mohammedanism, but spirit-worship pervades the population. Pop. with Madura, in 1901 34 133 685 in 1909 23,745 696, of whom nearly 80 000 were Europeans and about 200 000 Chinese. There are between 15,000 and 20 000 Arabs.

History—In the Middle Ages Java became the seat of powerful Hindu realms. These crumbled with the spread of Islam among the people just before the advent of the Europeans. The Portuguese made their way to the island early in the sixteenth century but at its close they were supplanted by the Dutch. At this time the two principal native states were Mataram and Banten, which had arisen on the ruins of the Hindu kingdoms. The Dutch conquest was not completed until the first half of the nineteenth century. About the middle of the eighteenth century the realm of Mataram after having been reduced to vassalage, was divided into the sultanates of Surakarta and Jokjakarta, which still linger on. The state of Banten disappeared a hundred years ago. The Dutch East India Company was dissolved at the close of the eighteenth century. Java was in the hands of the English from 1811 to 1816, during which time it was administered by Sir S. T. Raffles.

Jersey, Jersey (anc. Caesarea) the largest and south easternmost of the Channel Islands, belonging to Great Britain in the English Channel 16 miles W of the coast of France (Cotentin) and 90 miles E by E of the Isle of Portland. Lat. of St. Helier 49° 11' N. Lon. 2° 7' W. Length from E to W 11 miles average breadth 4 miles. Area, 45 sq. m. Pop. in 1901 52,794. The coasts are rocky and abrupt, and the only considerable inlet is St. Aubin's Bay on the S side. The whole island appears like a cordon more or less dotted with picturesque villages. The surface is undulating, the hill ranges enclosing fertile valleys. The climate is very mild, the mean annual temperature being 51.5° and the January temperature 42°. The annual rain fall is about 34 inches. Leading articles of export are apples, pears, orchard potatoes, butter and cows of an excellent breed (Jersey or Alderney). On the SE coast are extensive oyster beds, resorted to by a large fishing fleet belonging to the island. The trade is active (with England, France, and Canada) and the people of Jersey engage largely in the Newfoundland fishery. Numbers of vessels are annually built in Jersey. Steamers communicate frequently with Southampton, Saint Malo and other ports. The island is the residence of numerous English families but French is the language of the native people. Jersey has its own legislature, the states or insular parliament, consisting of 60 members and of a presiding officer, their acts being confirmed or annulled, in special cases, by the lieutenant-governor, the chief executive of the island. From the decisions of its royal court appeal lies only to the sovereign in council. The island has many Norman feudal customs. The principal towns are St. Helier (the capital) and St. Aubin. Jersey is an agreeable place of resort and is somewhat noted as a winter sanatorium, but its climate is less mild and equable than that of Guernsey. The island abounds in old buildings of much antiquarian interest.

Jersey, a southeastern county of Illinois bordering on Missouri, has an area of 700 sq. m. It is bounded on the E by the Mississippi River and on the W by the Illinois River and is partly drained by Macoupin Creek. Picturesque bluffs extend along the Mississippi River. Coal is found here. Jersey City, capital of Hudson co. N.J. on the right or W bank of the Hudson River at its entrance into New York Bay and opposite New York city from which it is 1 mile distant and with which constant communication is maintained by several lines of ferries. It adjoins Hoboken on the N and Newark Bay and the Hackensack River on the W. It is a terminus of several important lines of railroad, — the Pennsylvania the Central E. of New Jersey the Erie, the Lehigh Valley the West Shore, etc. — and it has also the pier of a number of Transatlantic lines of steamers. Immense quantities of iron, coal, produce and general merchandise are brought and shipped from here. Among the more notable buildings and institutions are the city hall, court-house, public library (with upward of 100,000 volumes), various hospitals, etc. Among the educational institutions are Hackensack Institute, St. Peter's College, St. Dominic's Academy and St. Mary's Academy.

Jersey City has many and various manufacturing industries, among which the more important are extensive tobacco manufactories, creosote-works, foundries and machine-shops boiler works, locomotive and railroad-supply manufactories, car works, large sugar-refineries, silk mills, numerous tin-works, glass-works, breweries, planing mills, potteries, manufactories of chemicals, jewelry, fireworks, lead-pencils, automobiles, candles, soap, hydrants, rubber goods, castor and kerosene oils, copper-ware, oakum chains and spikes, car-springs, stoves, steam boilers, etc. Here are located large stock-yards and an extensive abattoir where vast quantities of cattle and sheep are slaughtered for the New York markets. This establishment was opened in 1874 and is one of the largest, most complete, and best appointed in the United States. The slaughtering of hogs is carried on upon the Hackensack meadows, beyond the city limits. The site whereon Jersey City stands was formerly called Peesee Hook. In 1820 the place was chartered as the City of Jersey, which was changed in a subsequent charter (in 1838) to 'Jersey City'. The population in 1850 was 8956 in 1860 29,226 in 1870 82,545, in 1880 120,722 in 1890 153,803 in 1900 208,423

Jerusalem, Jerusalem (Hebrew Yerushala'im Gr. Ierusalēma, Hierosolēma L. Ierosolyma Arab. al-Quds the Holy) a city of Palestine the seat of the most important events described in the Bible, now comprised in the Turkish dominions. It is situated in the mountain region between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea, 35 miles SE of its port, Jaffa, with which it is connected by a railway 54 miles long and 15 miles W of the northern end of the Dead Sea. Lat. 31° 47' N. Lon. 35° 13' E. The city stands on a rocky plateau at an elevation of about 2500 feet above the level of the sea. On the N is the deep-cut valley of Kidron (or of Jehoshaphat) beyond which rises the Mount of Olives and on the W and S is the tortuous valley of Hinnom the two depressions meeting in the southeastern outskirts of the city about 500 ft. below the level of its site. The southern half of the modern town represents roughly the site of the main portion of ancient Jerusalem (the upper city) which was separated on the E. by a long depression, the Valley of Tyropoeon, now largely obliterated by the debris of centuries from the City of David (or Zion) and Mount Moriah (or the Temple Hill) to which the name Zion was afterwards applied. David's City is not included within the present walls. Beyond the walls, mainly on the NW an extensive new quarter has sprung up within the last 50 years. The city within the walls is divided into the Christian quarter in the NW, the Mohammedan in the NE, the Jewish in the SE and the Armenian in the SW. The streets are mostly narrow and there are many arched passages. The dwellings are for the most part massively built of heavy stone and frequently consist of a number of detached apartments. The roofs are flat, but a large number of the houses have low cupolas a single dwelling often having several. The many establishments that serve the needs of tourists and the various educational and philanthropic institutions detract greatly from the medieval and oriental appearance of the city. The modern walls of Jerusalem were built by Sultan Solyman the Magnificent in the first half of the sixteenth century and rest, except in the S. in great part upon ancient foundations. They are of hewn stone about 40 feet in height and have a moat of about 2½ miles. They are surmounted by numerous towers and pierced by 8 gates (one of them walled up) the principal being the Jaffa Gate, the Damascus Gate, and the Abdul-Hamid Gate.

The most striking and interesting feature of Jerusalem is the Haram ash-Sherif (the distinguished sanctuary) occupying the site of the Temple Hill. It is a rectangle about 500 yards long and about 300 yards wide. This area is still partly enclosed by walls, which on the E side form a part of the outer wall of the city, and both here and at the SW corner are portions composed of stones of vast size dating from the early period of the existence of the city. In the centre of the Haram ash-Sherif, upon a platform paved with marble, stands the magnificent mosque called Kabbates-Sakhra (the dome of the rock — i.e. the sacred rock) an outlying structure surmounted by an imposing dome. This adjoins the chief architectural feature of Jerusalem which is generally known as the Mosque of Omar was erected by the caliph Abd el Malik (685-705). On the southern edge of the Haram ash-Sherif is another celebrated ancient mosque the Masjid el-Aksa. A short distance to the north of the temple area extends the Via Dolorosa (Road of Suffering). In the Christian quarter about a third of a mile W of the Kabbates-Sakhra, stands the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, on the site of a church built by Constantine. The present edifice dates from the latter part of the Middle Ages but much of it represents restoration and rebuilding at various times. North of the Haram ash-Sherif on the ancient Bezetha, is the medieval church of Saint Anne recently restored by the French. Close to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre on a large open place called Muristan, is the German Church of the Redeemer consecrated in 1894. Amongst many other ecclesiastical edifices in the city may be mentioned the great Greek monastery the Coptic and Franciscan monasteries, the Armenian monastery of Saint James and the Latin patriarchal church. The Orthodox Greek Church possesses a large number of convents. Just outside of the city on the western declivity of the Mount of Olives is the Gelitumene Church of the Russians and in the north western suburbs, on the Russian settlement, is the Russian cathedral. The Jews have over 10 synagogues. On the Mount of Olives is the Church of the Ascension. Jerusalem has a number of religious and educational establishments: hospitals and other philanthropic institutions belonging to the various churches and religious orders and to different nationalities. There are to a great extent in the suburbs where are also the European consulates. There are about 20 Jewish colonies in the outskirts of the city. Close to the Jaffa Gate is the citadel, with massive walls and towers dating in part from ancient times. The remains of ancient Jerusalem outside of the vast excavations of debris are scanty consisting mainly of portions of the old walls, cisterns, pools, water-conduits, and burial places. Near what was the southern end of the old City of David, about a quarter of a mile away from the modern city wall is the pool of Silwan. The tunnel 1,600 feet in length which was excavated in the time of the kings of Judah to supply this pool has recently been discovered. To the N of the city are the burial places which from the medieval legends that grew up about them, have come to be known as the tombs of the kings and of the judges. The trade and industries of Jerusalem are unimportant. The city is the capital of the autonomous district of Jerusalem. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic, a Greek and an Armenian patriarch, and of an Anglican bishop. The population is about 60,000 of whom about two-thirds are Jews the remainder being about two-thirds Christians and one-third Mohammedans.

Jerusalem is mentioned as early as 1480 A.D. in the Egyptian records. About 400 years later it became the capital of the Hebrew kingdom. On the disruption of the realm after the death of Solomon it was the capital of the kingdom of Judah. In 586 B.C. it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon. The Jews were permitted to rebuild it under the Persians. After the Persians it passed successively under the sway of Macedon, Egypt, and Syria. It was the capital again of an independent Jewish state under the Maccabees in the second and first centuries B.C. after whose fall it rose to great splendor under Herod the Great, when Judaea had become a dependency of Rome. In A.D. 70 the city was destroyed by the Romans under Titus. In the following century the emperor Hadrian founded a new city on its site, which he named Aelia Capitolina. This city was the capital of the Christian kingdom of Jerusalem, established by the Crusaders, from 1099 to 1187. It has been in the hands of the Ottoman Turks since 1516.
